A few inhalations will correct the most offensive breath. Made of hard rubber, can be carried as handily as a pencil or needle-case, and is always ready for use. It supercedes all other inhaling tubes and contrivances—is approved by the entire Medical Fraternity and endorsed by the Standard Medical Journals of the world. Dr. George Hadley, Professor of Chemistry and Pharmacy in the University of Buffalo, in a carefully considered report upon its merits, concludes in these words: "On the whole this Inhaler seems to accomplish its purposes by novel, yet by the most simple and effectual means, to be philosophical in conception, and well carried out in the execution." No person afflicted or threatened with any of the difficulties stated, should be without this Inhaler. Patented in the United States, England and Canada. Over 200,000 in use. Send your address and receive our descriptive circular, and testimonials of hundreds of Physicians who have used it in their practice. We send inhaler with Inhalant for two month's use, free by mail, for $2.00. Extra bottles of Inhalant, 50c. Sold by Druggists.

NAPANEE JULY 20th, 1876.

The usual half-yearly examinations of candidates for Public School certificates have been in progress throughout the country during the past week. The result, so far as heard from, has been most disastrous to those applying. The papers were unusually severe, and few were able to obtain the necessary number of marks to entitle them to a certificate. We question the wisdom of making the second and third class examinations so difficult.

Local capitalists of Belleville are about taking steps to have the Grand Junction Railway completed. Among the names mentioned as forming the Syndicate of the proposed company we observe those of Alex. Brown, contractor, Sanford Baker and Hon. Lewis Wallbridge. These men are well known for their financial standing and business enterprise, and should they succeed in inducing a sufficient number to join them the road will be completed.

The writ for the election of a member to represent Glengary in the Commons, in the place of Mr. Archibald McNabb, unseated by petition, has been issued. The nomination will be on the 24th, inst., and election on 31st. Mr. McNabb will probably be the Reform candidate again, as nothing was proved against him to disqualify. The Conservatives have induced Mr. McLennan, of Montreal, to sustain their cause, and he has issued his address accordingly.

The Conservative press, led by the Mail, are clamoring for a dissolution of the Dominion Parliament and a general election. The issue of the recent elections in North and South Ontario has inspired the Opposition with the belief that the Meakenzie Administration no longer possesses the confidence of the people. The conclusion is so outrageously absurd and ridiculous as to be unworthy of serious remark.

ometer is up among the nineties, than a cool dip. But in our eagerness to enjoy the luxury we should not forget that great caution is absolutely necessary in order that benefit instead of injury may be derived therefrom. We too frequently plunge into the water with the blood at a boiling heat and the whole system open with perspiration. The sudden change of temperature upon the exposed surface drives the blood to the brain and apoplexy or cramps (the same thing) follow. The consequence of this want of precaution is—the death of many by drowning.

THE FASHIONS.

(Harper's Bazar.)

THE HABIT.

Close-fitting, long-waisted habits are the fashionable over dresses worn abroad. They are made of the Oriental fabrics brought into notice since the Prince of Wales' visit to India, such as lampas, Chinese silks, Indian crape, and damask Siciliennes. This long over dress is made of dull, dusky shades, and brightened by the brilliant embroideries hitherto mentioned, and with trimming laces of bright scarlet or blue in Smyrna patterns. The front of the garment is close-fitting, straight, and fastened by a single row of buttons, or else it is made with a waistcoat that is richly embroidered, and invariably trimmed with a jabot of lace. The back is almost patchy with its many long, narrow forms, that have seams beginning on the shoulders and ending low on the tournure, giving the fashionable appearance of slenderness. The skirt is draped very low on the lower skirt, and does not obtrude itself by elaborate proportions.

INDIA SCARFS.

Among other Eastern goods are scarfs of India silk draped as over-skirts. Some of these are the plain twilled silk we are accustomed to, while others have a crape-like finish, and are wrought all over with various colored silks, to represent flowers, birds, and in some instances Japanese draperies on skirts, not only in silks, but in laces. French modists now drape wide laces across the front of evening and bridal dresses instead of using them for flouncings.

HALF HANDKERCHIEFS.

Small squares of silks for shawls and and fichus are also imported from the far East. They are worn tied loosely around the neck as half handkerchiefs, or else they are lapped across the bosom in fichu style. They are made of delicate colors, and richly fringed, or else edged with embroidery and lace. Some pretty half handkerchiefs made at home by ladies of taste are merely three-cornered pieces of pale or of dark blue or cardinal red crape or soft silk bordered with a white embroidered muslin ruffle. Worth adds peasant fashions of the dress material to many of his summer dress may be of the favorite cream-colored tulle, or the square-meshed ecru grenadine looped with gay Roman ribbons, or with double-faced ribbons that are cream on one side and black on the other.

Beaded laces have been abandoned by many, but they are found in use at the most exclusive houses, and are sent over from Paris on some of the handsomest dresses. Thus there are black brocaded grenadines and the rich damasse stuffs made up over silk, with two or three diagonal tabliers, each edged with lace in which blue or steel beads are thickly woven. The basque is trimmed with the same beaded lace, and the effect is very distinguished. Other dresses of black Chambray gauze just received from Worth's are trimmed similarly with lace, in which are finely cut jet beads. The fringes and galloons of jet are not, however, seen. Merchants who have gone abroad to select their fall and winter goods write back that Worth is determined to restore jet trimmings to the favor they so recently lost. Pingat and other leading Parisian houses prefer wool braids and those in which gilt and silver threads are woven. At the summer watering-places these metal galloons are now seen as trimming for rich dresses of camel's-hair and of grenadine; blue camel's-hair of the darkest shade has rows of wide silver braid; black or seal brown camel's-hair has five or six rows of half-inch gold braid around the polonaise; basques and over-skirts of bottle green grenadine have green galloons thickly interspersed with silver threads.

CANADIAN SHIPPING BILL.

The question which has been before the British Parliament for some time in reference to Canadian Shipping, will in all likelihood be settled in our favor. While the Shipping Bill was before the Commons, Mr. Plimsoll managed to have a clause inserted, absolutely prohibiting the carrying of deckloads in the winter, in place of the clause copied from the Canadian Act, which allows deck-loading under stringent conditions. Representations of the injury that would result to Canadian shipping were made by our Deputy-Minister of Marine, which were referred to a committee of Cabinet ministers consisting of the Lord Chancellor, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Richmond, and Lord Carnarvon. The House of Lords in committee have made an amendment to the Bill and it now stands for a third reading on Friday next, after which the assent of the Commons will be asked to the Lords' amendment.

FLUCTUATING POLITICS.

He was seedy and battered, and he looked "powerful" dry. He entered a Main street saloon and approaching the bar said to the barkeeper: "It's a good ticket, aint it?" "First rate," replied the barkeeper. "You betcher life them's my men; Hayes'n Wheeler for me. 'Rah for Hayes'n Wheeler! Set out some o' yer 'Publican whiskey, barkeeper." Mr. McNabb will probably be the Reform candidate again, as nothing was proved against him to disqualify. The Conservative press, led by the Mail, are clamoring for a dissolution of the Dominion Parliament and a general election. The issue of the recent elections in North and South Ontario has inspired the Opposition with the belief that the Mackenzie Administration no longer possesses the confidence of the people. The conclusion is so outrageously absurd and ridiculous as to be unworthy of serious remark. Mr. Mackenzie closed the last session of the House with the largest majority that ever supported a Canadian Ministry, and it is not likely that the small majorities against him in the Ontarios will disconcert his plans to any great extent.

The war between Turkey and her rebellious provinces has assumed dangerous proportions. The Servians were the aggressors and crossed into Turkey with a considerable force, but thus far the fighting has been in favor of the Turks. The most barbarous atrocities are practiced on both sides, and though the great powers of Europe have agreed to observe a strict neutrality, the probability is that they will be drawn into the conflict, unless the difficulty be soon settled. The Turks have employed Circassians to lay waste the country of the insurgents by burning villages, destroying property and even murdering men, women and children. They also bring Christian women and children before the army during a battle and have them exposed to the enemy's bullets. This is done with the intention of diverting the fury of the Servians and giving themselves an advantage. The Servians and other insurgents being mostly Christians they would naturally object to firing upon defenceless members of their own faith, if aware of their presence in the Turkish trenches. Lord Derby has repeatedly assured the British people that non-intervention is the policy of the Government, and other powers seem equally as determined to keep out of the war.

Some of these are the plain twilled silk we are accustomed to, while others have a crape-like finish, and are wrought all over with various colored silks, to represent flowers, birds, and in some instances Japanese draperies on skirts, not only in silks, but in laces. Some pretty half handkerchiefs made at home by ladies of taste are merely three-cornered pieces of pale or of dark blue or cardinal red crape or soft silk bordered with a white embroidered muslin ruffle. Worth adds peasant fishus of the dress material to many of his summer costumes, and this does away with the necessity for a lace sacque or mantle. White lace, muslin, or else white silk half handkerchiefs, give a most distinguished finish to costumes of finished silk, foulard, or grenadine.

FRENCH FANCIES.

Worth's fancy for gay Scotch tartans is shown in the brilliant costumes he prepares for the seaside resorts. For instance, with skirts of bottle green velvet he makes over dresses of soft thick tartan silk. The over dress has a Breton basque with velvet vest fastened up by pearl buttons and trimmed with a jabot of lace. The black and white shepherd's-plaid is also made up over green or blue velvet skirts, and the material is cut in such a way that all the breadths are bias, making the checks seem elongated. The trimming is a vest, cuffs, collar, pocket, and wide bias bands of velvet, like that of the skirt.

The princesse dress so popular with Parisians this season is merely an elongation of the princesse polonaise in Bazar No. 4, Vol. IX.; it also resembles the princesse dress now worn by little girls, and for this reason it is called in France the Babe dress. It is made of summer silks and of fine woolen fabrics. The back has the heavy kilt-pleating, and its plainness is relieved by a wide sash which passes low around the hips, with a chatelaine bag pendent on the right side. Sometimes Worth buttons this dress behind, and makes it fit the figure as if it were moulded in it—a very pretty fashion for young ladies with well rounded figures. For those who are too slight the waist is made double breasted.

Among other tasteful dresses worn at the summer resorts are those of dark stuffs trimmed with white English embroidery. Seal brown, navy blue, and invisible green, foulards and sponges are very effective when trimmed with wrought fruffles and white muslin; and the same colors are chosen in summer camel's hair and relived by these white frills. A handsome dress worn at Newport has a skirt of black velvet with one deep gathered flounce. Above this

"My friend," replied the barkeeper, "you're a little off; this is a Democratic house." "Thunder exclaimed the soaker, "the Dimmycrats aint got nobody to holler for yit, and I'm as dry as a powder-horn and a cent twixt me and eternity." "My friend," said the obliging barkeeper, "while differing with you in politics, I cannot resist your appeal; help yourself to some of this," and he set out a glass and the bottle of lightning kept for the special use of stiffis." The "stiff" poured out a glassful of the stuff, emptied it into his throat, and when he got through coughing and wiping his eyes on his coat-sleeve, said: "I aint got no money; but if I was the Comstock ledge I'd bet myself ag'in a Lander Hill razor-blade that them durned Black Republicans don't get away with the enscon election."—Austin (New) Reveille.

MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN

LEFT TO DIE ON THE ROAD BY RELATIVES.

MONTREAL, July 15.—Louis Durrocher, about thirty years of age, living at Point aux Trembles, has died under the following circumstances. Durrocher was working at River des Prairies, and on the 13th instant left the shanty to pay a visit to his father. The day turned out a stormy one, so fierce as to completely bewilder the man, causing him to lose his way. He wandered about till he became worn out, at the same time suffering hunger and thirst. In this condition he was found the following morning by some men, one of whom was his cousin and the other a friend. On seeing these two coming towards him, and after stating that he was dying of hunger, he requested them to procure him food, offering money at the same time. The young men refused and left him there, and did not notify his father. In the meantime, Louis scarcely breathing, owing to his sufferings, fell into a sleep, upon awakening from which he became delirious, and in his agony fractured his skull in several places. About 8 o'clock that night, he was found bathed

The war between Turkey and her rebellious provinces has assumed dangerous proportions. Lord Derby has repeatedly assured the British people that non-intervention is the policy of the Government, and other powers seem equally as determined to keep out of the war.

THE HEATED TERM.

For two weeks we have been experiencing a degree of heat scarcely before equalled in this country. Certainly not for many years, or in the recollection of that infallible authority, "the oldest inhabitant," has such a protracted term prevailed. As might be expected the casualties have been many, and in other ways the effects are felt to the detriment of health and comfort. Much of our inconvenience is undoubtedly due to our own wilful disobedience of the laws of nature and common sense. The dietary habits of our people do not sufficiently change from the arctic cold of mid-winter to the almost tropical heat of mid-summer. Too much animal food is consumed and too little of the more cooling, life-sustaining vegetable diet. We get into the habit of using a certain routine of dishes and find it hard to break away. But perhaps more danger to human life, during the hot weather, is found in the thoughtless disregard for sanitary rules that govern so many people while bathing. Nothing is more desirable and indeed necessary, when the therm-

instance, with skirts of bottle green velvet he makes over dresses of soft thick tartan silk. The over dress has a Breton basque with velvet vest fastened up by pearl buttons and trimmed with a jabot of lace. The black and white shepherd's-plaid is also made up over green or blue velvet skirts, and the material is cut in such a way that all the breadths are bias, making the checks seem elongated. The trimming is a vest, cuffs, collar, pocket, and wide bias bands of velvet, like that of the skirt.

The princesse dress so popular with Parisians this season is merely an elongation of the princesse polonaise in Bazar No. 4, Vol. IX.; it also resembles the princesse dress now worn by little girls, and for this reason it is called in France the Babe dress. It is made of summer silks and of fine woollen fabrics. The back has the heavy kilt-pleating, and its plainness is relieved by a wide sash which passes low around the hips, with a chatelaine bag pendent on the right side. Sometimes Worth buttons this dress behind, and makes it fit the figure as if it were moulded in it—a very pretty fashion for young ladies with well rounded figures. For those who are too slight the waist is made double breasted.

Among other tasteful dresses worn at the summer resorts are those of dark stuffs trimmed with white English embroidery. Seal brown, navy blue, and invisible green, foulards and sponges are very effective when trimmed with wrought ruffles and white muslin; and the same colors are chosen in summer camel's hair and relieved by these white frills. A handsome dress worn at Newport has a skirt of black velvet with one deep gathered flounce. Above this is a long deep round over-skirt of navy blue foulard of solid color, but picked out in tiny amure designs, and edged with a white cambric ruffle three inches wide, and entirely covered with open-worked stars. The basque of blue foulard slopes away in front to show a velvet press, and is edged with a white frill. The Gainsborough hat is of white chip, with blue facing on the turned up brim, and a cluster of white daisies stuck on the left side; a scarf of blue foulard is twined around the crown, and a long, white ostrich plume sweeps over it. The jewelry is sometimes of the finest filigree silver, and again a set of lapis lazuli is worn with it. The parasol is a large English shape, covered with blue Venetian silk, and a handle of carved ivory.

Many sea-side dresses that will be worn all through mid-summer have not only lower skirts of velvet, but sleeves also; indeed, these velvet accessories have superseded silk among leaders of fashion. In a summer outfit, a sensible plan, and one that gives variety, is to have two or three sleeveless over dresses that may be worn with the expensive skirt and sleeves of velvet. Thus for an afternoon costume for driving, the sleeves and skirt of black velvet are worn with a sleeveless polonaise of velvet-striped grenadine, richly trimmed with thread lace; while for dinner and evening entertainments the same sleeves and skirts are used with a basque and long round over-skirt of pale blue damask silk, edged with fringe and caught up with velvet loops; or else the over kept for the special use of stiffs." The "stiff" poured out a glassful of the stuff, emptied it into his throat, and when he got through coughing and wiping his eyes on his coat-sleeve, said: "I aint got no money; but if I was the Comstock ledge I'd bet myself ag'in a Lander Hill razor-blade that them durned Black Republicans don't get away with the ensain' election."—Austin (Nev) Reveille.

In the meantime, Louis scarcely breathing, owing to his sufferings, fell into a sleep, upon awakening from which he became delirious, and in his agony fractured his skull in several places. About 8 o'clock that night, he was found bathed in blood by the individuals who had so cruelly left him in the morning. They ran to old Mr. Durrocher's to tell him about his son, and on reaching the place he found his son a corpse. The young men were severely censured by the coroner, who held an inquest. More than a rebuke should be administered to people guilty of such inhumanity.

UMBRELLA STEALING.—Let no one longer say that stealing an umbrella is not a crime. An English justice has established the precedent, and henceforth let all transgressors beware. There are several strange features about the case. One was that already mentioned. The theft was of an umbrella, and stranger still, the thief was "a lady bore." The case occurred at Hammersmith, England. Even the fact that rain began to fall while she was waiting in the shop whence the umbrella was stolen, and that the kleptomaniac fully intended to have returned it, the article being a nice silk one, failed to act as mitigating circumstances. Justice was inexorable and would not even let the lady go on her own recognizance, but through the voice of the magistrate imposed a sentence of fourteen days' imprisonment with hard labor. "Hard labor!" exclaimed the prisoner with surprise, and the court curtly responded, "Yes."

THE "ALBION" UP AGAIN.

Two weeks ago we mentioned that Messrs. Waggoner & McMillan had bought Mr. Wm. Martin's fine large residence on the corner of Queen and Montreal streets, with the stone dwelling house adjoining, and converted the two buildings into one, to supply the place of their burnt Albion Hotel. They have made some alterations, and now for its size possess the snugest little hotel in the Province. On Saturday night it was the stopping place of nearly 20 commercial gentlemen who arrived that day, who were pleased to find the old attention on the part of the landlords and a pleasanter outlook than before—that on Queen street. Messrs. Waggoner & McMillan had preserved part of their driving sheds and stables from the fire, and have already erected new ones in addition, besides which they to-day bought from Mr. M. Dolan part of his large lot adjoining to afford more yard room. The yards and stables connect as well, if not better, with the new house than with the old one, lying as they do between the two sites. The outbuildings have brick fronts. The Albion will be at once extended on Montreal street, by a large building. There is push about the Albion men.—Whig.

CORNWALL CANAL ENLARGEMENT.
NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the Secretary of Public Works, and endorsed "Tender for the Cornwall Canal," will be received at this office until the arrival of the Eastern and Western mails, on WEDNESDAY, the NINTH DAY OF AUGUST NEXT, for the formation of a new entrance—south of the present one—at the lower end of the Cornwall Canal, embracing the construction of two Liftlocks, Waste-weir, &c.

The works will be let in one section, as indicated on the map of that part of the line, which, together with plans and specifications of the various works, can be seen at this office, and at the office of the Canal Superintendent, Cornwall and after FRIDAY, the TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY OF JULY (INSTANT), at either of which places printed Forms of Tender can be obtained.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that Tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and—in the case of firms—except there are attached the actual signatures, the nature of the occupation, and places of residence, of each member of the same; and further, an accepted bank cheque, or other readily available security, for the sum of FOUR THOUSAND DOLLARS, must accompany each Tender, which shall be forfeited, if the party tendering declines or fails to enter into contract for the works when called upon to do so, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque or money thus sent in, will be returned to the respective parties whose tenders are not accepted.

For the due fulfillment of the contract, satisfactory security will be required on real estate, or by deposit of money, public or municipal securities, or bank stocks, to the amount of five per cent on the bulk sum of the contract, of which the sum sent in with the Tender will be considered a part.

Ninety per cent only of the progress estimates will be paid until the completion of the works.

Local News.

HAYING.—Farmers are now busy with their haying, a large acreage having been cut over within a few days. The rains have of late interfered a good deal with the labors of the hay-makers.

FOR THE BALL MOUNTAINS.—A party of some twelve or thirteen of J. Gibbard & Son's employees left on Monday evening last for the Ball Mountains, on a huckle-berrying expedition. The Napanee Brass Band headed their wagons through the street.

NOT FOUND.—The body of the young man Gorman who fell overboard from the steamer Oswego Belle on Wednesday 6th inst., on the way from Oswego, has not yet been found. A reward has been offered by the heart-broken parents for its recovery.

DIVISION COURT.—This Court was held on Monday 3d inst., at the Court House, and only lasted one hour and 10 minutes, to the satisfaction of all concerned. Ten cases and 15 Judgement Summonses were disposed of. The next court will be held on the 28th of August.

LOGIC.—One healthy bug will convince a potato plant that life is all a fleeting show. But one dose of Paris Green, on the other hand, will secure the average, and restore confidence to the plant by convincing that bug that there is nothing certain but death.

SOLILOQUY.—Now is the time for lovers to get spooney over ice cream, she taking a few pretty dabs at his vanilla, and he borrowing a taste of her chocolate. This process inspires confidence in the day when they will be throwing corned beef and cabbage across the table.

"ARMENIA."—This is the name of a new steamer which is to run between Kingston and Picton daily, leaving Kingston in the morning and returning in the evening. She has an elegantly fitted up cabin and a large room deck and will make an excellent excursion boat. She is owned by D. & W.

FREE THOUGHT.—The celebrated B. F. Underwood is announced for this and tomorrow evenings at the Music Hall. In the event of an English Church clergyman not appearing in debate with him, he will lecture. The admission is free.

THE TWELFTH IN CENTREVILLE.—The Orange celebration in Centreville on the 12th was a great success, from all we can learn. There was between 500 and 1,000 in the procession, and the village was full of spectators. It was a fine day, and a good time was spent.

NOT SETTLED.—Up to the time of our going to press we have not heard of any verdict being arrived at in the case of the young man Flynn killed by the cars at Collins Bay. The general opinion, however, is that the company will be freed from blame.

ANOTHER FINE.—The charge made against John Bowie, of the Napanee Brewery, of having sold beer in small quantities, has at last been proven. The case was before C. James and M. Neville, Esqs. J. P's., on Friday last, when it was proven beer had been sold by an employee on Dominion Day. Fined $20 and costs.

THE "PIONEER."—It is expected the "Pioneer" will be able to start on a cruise early next week. She is now nearly fitted up, the mainmast and bowsprit having been placed in her. The work of rigging is being hurried on by the Messrs. Dickens. Please may we go?

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—On Monday as Mr. Driver, a farmer living upon the Indian Reserve in Tyendinaga, was on his way home from Shannonville with a load of flour, he fell from the waggon when about a mile from the village, the wheels passing diagonally over his body, crushing one of his shoulders and breaking some of his ribs, from the effect of which death ensued on Thursday evening. Whiskey was the cause.

PROFLIGACY.—Two young girls, named Rachel Babcock, and Annie Barnhart, of Belleville, were brought before C. James Esq., J. P., on Friday last, on a charge of being frequenters of a house of ill fame. The charge was made by the mother of the latter, who in addition charged Rachel with having enticed her daughter from her home in Belleville. Rachel was given 15 minutes to leave town, and after a good deal of persuasion, with a prospect of gaol before her, Annie returned home with her mother.

TRADE PROSPECTS.—We are in receipt of a very lengthy document published by John McKillop & Co's. Commercial DIVIDEND.—The Dominion Telegraph Company announce an interim dividend of three per cent. for the half year ending 30th June. The business of the company would have warranted the payment of three and a half per cent., but giving due consideration to the depressed state of commerce generally, the Directors have discreetly determined to await the result of the entire year, when they hope to make up the usual dividend of seven per annum.

PRENTICE BOYS.—At a meeting of Schomberg Lodge No 3, Prentice Boys, held in their hall on Friday night of last week, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

Bro N. Paisley, W. M.
" J. C. Smith, D. M.
" M. Richardson, R. S.
" Geo. Challes, A. R. S.
" Geo. Kimmerly, Treas.
" L. Fers, I. T.
" C. G. Ham, O. T.
" Wm. Madden, F. C.

The Belleville lodge intend holding a picnic, to celebrate the closing of the Gates of Derry, on the 12th August, at which it is expected Napanee and Kingston will take part.

PROMPT SETTLEMENT.—We are indebted to the Provincial and Western Insurance Companies for their prompt settlement of our loss by fire, which occurred on the 10th inst. In the case of one of the companies, the check for the money was in our hands on the Saturday following, and the other a couple of days later. We are pleased to know ours is not an exceptional case, but that all losses are settled by both these companies with the same promptness. We, therefore, cheerfully recommend them to the public generally. W. V. Detlor, Esq., is the Agent for both companies in Napanee.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—An accident which for some time threatened to be fatal, occurred to Mr. H. P. Lowry, an employee of J. Gibbard & Son, on Saturday evening, 8th inst. Mr. Lowry was engaged in sawing some lumber on a small circular saw, and in taking back a piece of board to saw it through again, it caught on the saw, and, notwithstanding a firm grip was held of it, was forced against the pit of his stomach. He was knocked senseless, and almost doubled up. Dr. Ruttan was sent for, but as there were no external wounds he could do no more than give him quieting medicines. He was soon after removed to his home, and, with close attention, we are pleased to know is rapidly recovering.

Cheese and butter manufacturers should bear in mind that none but persons in good health should have charge of a dairy room, for well-authenticated cases have been published in which scarlatina, measles, and other infectious diseases have been conveyed through the virus absorbed by milk manipulated by persons not fully recovered from such diseases.

OFF TO KINGSTON.—In accordance with a motion of the Council to that effect, the Deputy Reeve of the town, and the Chief of Police, took an invalid pauper named Murphy to the Kingston General Hospital on Thursday, 6th inst. They were informed the man had been there before, but stole away. He will not get away again until he is either killed or cured. There is good hopes of his recovery.

THE FIREMEN'S DEMONSTRATION.—Owing to so few of the invitations which were sent out having been responded to, the demonstration which was to have taken place on Thursday, 3rd August, has been postponed till the 31st. Printed invitations have been sent out by the Chief Engineer, and if enough companies respond it will then be held, if not, it will be postponed for another year.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—On Monday as Mr. Driver, a farmer living upon the Indian Reserve in Tyendinaga, was on his way home from Shannonville with a load of flour, he fell from the waggon when about a mile from the village, the wheels passing diagonally over his body, crushing one of his shoulders and breaking some of his ribs, from the effect of which death ensued on Thursday evening. TRADE PROSPECTS.—We are in receipt of a very lengthy document published by John McKillop & Co's. Commercial Agency, Montreal, giving some idea as to crop prospects throughout the Dominion. The paper is got up for presentation to the friends of the agency in the Dominion, and is intended to act as a guide to tradesmen assisting them in the formation of a business policy for the coming fall. The information has been obtained by agents sent out for that purpose. In summing up the whole they say "we may safely conclude that the harvest promises to be of unusual yield."

THE "NATIONAL."—This Toronto weekly, which went down with the Sun, has come safely out of the trials and troubles which caused its suspension, and reappears as an advocate of "Canada First" principles. It is of course neutral as between the two great political parties, and deals out sharp raps at each with notable impartiality. The editorial articles are cleverly written, the selections are made with good taste, and the paper is worthy the support of the class whose opinions it ably represents.

"CLIFF'S MONTHLY JOURNAL."—We have received the first number of this new publication, devoted to Music and general Miscellany, and readily express our appreciation of its merits. It contains sixteen pages, nine of which are devoted to music, and the remainder to miscellany and advertisements. The musical selections are of a high order, and must be popular with the public, more especially young ladies who wish to practice the best authors. The price of this Monthly is only 75 cts. Published by W. W. Cliff, Esq., Carleton Place.

VAN AMBURGH'S SHOW.—The performances of this old and favorite show here on the 11th inst., were not as well attended as they have been in former years. One cause, however, of the slim audiences was the rain storm which ushered in the day. The show itself was not one whit behind what it was formerly, but still retains its old reputation. The animals in the menagerie are all of the usual kind seen there, but very good specimens. A first-class circus has been added to the concern since its last tour through Canada, which is an additional attraction. Many features of it make it the best show we have seen for some time.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—An accident of a most painful nature occurred to a little son of R. S. Chatterson's on Sunday 9th inst., which has proved fatal. It appears that Mrs. Chatterson had been giving the little fellow, the kernel of some prune pits to eat, and by some means he swallowed a piece of the shell, which stuck in his wind pipe, and stopped up the passage. Surgical aid was called in, but all their efforts proved futile to extricate the pit or alleviate the poor little fellows suffering. He lived for about 24 hours in the most intense agony, when his little spirit was wafted away to the realms of bliss. He was but 18 months old, and was said by all who knew him to be a very bright, smart child. We heartily sympathize with the parents in their bereavement.

UNIQUE AND USEFUL.—Pedestrians on West Dundas St. these warm evenings have observed Councillor Spencer

manipulated by persons not fully recovered from such diseases.

OFF TO KINGSTON.—In accordance with a motion of the Council to that effect, the Deputy Reeve of the town, and the Chief of Police, took an invalid pauper named Murphy to the Kingston General Hospital on Thursday, 6th inst. ACCIDENT.—As Mrs. Wm. Dryden was coming down town from her residence on Thursday of last week, and when a little above the residence of Mr. Allen Fraser, on John Street, she stumbled into a hole in the side-walk, and fell with such force as to break her collar bone. She was assisted to her home, where medical aid was summoned, and her wounds dressed. And now, perhaps, our city fathers will do something with the plank walks, when they find an action for damages on their hands.

ACCIDENT.—We regret to notice our friend C. W. Huffman, Esq., Deputy Reeve of Ernesttown, had his right shoulder badly injured on Saturday morning last. It appears he had been harnessing a horse, and had taken him as far as the door, when the animal jumped away, and threw Mr. H. violently against a post. He was knocked insensible for a time, but soon rallied. As his bruises are not very serious, however, he will soon be around as usual.

ENLARGING.—No better evidence of success can be noted than the frequent enlargements Mr. S. McLaughlin has been called upon to make in his place of business. We are pleased to note his prosperity, as we believe him to be an enterprising citizen, and one worthy of encouragement. He is now, in addition to the fruit and grocery business, a large importer of fresh fish,—which is certainly a boon to the town. Give Sam a call opposite to the Tichborne House, you will be sure to find just what you want.

BATHING.—Some steps ought to be taken by the authorities to prevent bathing during the day time along the harbor. Almost every day scores of little boys, and big ones too, may be seen going in in almost any part of the river. A splendid place has been prepared by Jasper Snider, where old or young can bathe to their heart's content. His place is so constructed as to suit either the swimmer or one who cannot swim. It is open both day and night, and the cost of a bath is only 10 cents. Jasper has gone to a considerable expense in fitting up his bathing house, and should be encouraged.

RESIGNED.—We regret exceedingly to have to announce that our very worthy and much esteemed principal of the High School here, John Campbell, Esq., M. A., has tendered his resignation to the Board of School Trustees. Mr. Campbell's duties here being very arduous, and the salary considerably below what it should have been, he felt himself at liberty to do better should an opportunity offer. Such a chance was not long in presenting itself, as without application, he has been appointed Classical Master of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, by the Provincial School Inspector. This, we are sure, will be sad news to many of the pupils who have been under Mr. Campbell's tuition, some of them for years, and we fear his place will not be easily supplied. Peterborough is fortunate in having secured his services. There are few better teachers to be found in the Province.

UNIQUE AND USEFUL.—Pedestrians on West Dundas St. these warm evenings have observed Councillor Spencer exercising his muscle and looking refreshingly cool amidst falling water, flowers and shade trees. The machinery by means of which he makes such an interesting display consists of one of McMartin's double action force pumps, placed in a well supplied with an abundance of water, and having forty or fifty feet of rubber hose attached to the spout. One man or a strong boy can easily force through this hose of half inch nozzle, a stream of water with sufficient force to be thrown over Mr. Spencer's residence. In addition to answering an excellent purpose for watering the grounds it can be used with good effect, in case of fire. It is, indeed, unique and useful.

A NUISANCE.—On Tuesday morning last Mrs. Hearn was tried before His Worship the Mayor, on a charge of keeping a disorderly house. The complaint was laid by Alex. Babcock, who lives in the same house with Mrs. Hearn. The case occupied the Court nearly the entire morning, there being several witnesses on both sides. Mrs. Hearn was her own counsel in the trial, and defended herself bravely, so much so as to fasten a conviction upon the complainant. She was fined $5, and $3.95 costs. A charge against Betty Hearn was dismissed, and Alex. Babcock was fined $2 and $3.20 costs, for using insulting language. The neighborhood where these people live has been greatly annoyed for a long time by rowdies congregating in and around the premises, and often using most obscene language.

FIRE IN THE EXPRESS OFFICE.

On Monday night, the 10th inst., the fire fiend visited our office, and but for the timely arrival of a number of friends, the building, together with those adjoining, must have been reduced to ashes. It was first discovered about 11:30 p.m., by some gentlemen in the Billiard Room adjoining, in the north-west corner of the office, by the flames darting out from the window. Hurrying up stairs, the door was forced open, when the room was found to be filled with flame and smoke, so that it was with great difficulty and danger to themselves, the fire was reached. The alarm was soon given, and the engine was got out quickly and on the spot. Previous to its coming, however, pails were secured, and with water from the cistern in the press room, the flames were soon got under control, but not before a large quantity of type had been destroyed. There still being a dense smoke in the room, the hose was brought up stairs, and the steamer commenced to play upon the fire, and in a very short time had it subdued.

How the fire could have originated is to us a mystery, as, when the office was closed for the night everything was apparently safe. There had been no fire in the building for a long time before it, and smoking is not allowed in the premises in working hours.

Of the extent of our loss it is as yet a hard matter to form an estimate, as we had a large quantity of material in the corner where the fire took place. In addition to all this there is the damage by water, and the suspension of work, loss of manuscripts, &c., and many other inconveniences we have been put to.

In consequence of our misfortune we were unable to publish last week, and this week present our paper in a very imperfect form, part of it having been printed for last week. We are now, however, fitted up again, and hope to be able next week to go on as before.

Fortunately for us, the stock, as well as the building, was insured, though not to such an extent as to cover more than one-half our loss had the building been destroyed. There was $2,500 insurance on the material, &c., in the office, divided between two companies, as follows:—In the Western, $1,500, and in the Provincial, $1,000. The facts being at once telegraphed to these companies, their inspectors were sent on, and within an incredibly short time after the fire, the loss was adjusted to our mutual satisfaction.

ICE CREAM FESTIVAL.—The Ladies Aid Society of the C. M. Church Selby, purpose having a festival in McKim's Grove, on Saturday next, at 1 p. m. A lecture will also be given by Rev. W. V. Sexsmith, of British Columbia, on that country. Admission 25 cents.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—We recently paid a visit to the photographic studio of Mr. J. S. Hulett here, which well repaid our pains. He has hung around his gallery some very beautiful life-size pictures, mostly of our citizens. On examination, however, we found he has work in from all parts of the Province, his pictures in every case giving satisfaction. With his beautiful and costly solar instrument, and the services of a first class artist, such as he now has, his work cannot be excelled anywhere. All in want of anything in the photographic line will do well to give him a call.

We and Our Neighbors.

BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE

AUTHOR OF "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN," ETC., ETC.

Mrs. Betsey tell into Dinah's arms, and cried on her shoulder, declaring that she couldn't take a cent of her money, and that they were all ruined, and fell into what Dinah used to call one of her "bad spells." So she swept her up in her arms forthwith and carried her up-stairs and put her to bed, amid furious dissentient barking from Jack, who seemed to consider it his duty to express an opinion in the matter.

"Dar now, ye aggravatin' critter, lie down and shet up," she said to Jack, as she lifted him on the bed and saw him cuddle down in Mrs. Betsey's arms and lay his rough cheek against hers.

Dinah remembered, years before, her young mistress lying weak and faint on that same spot, and how there had been the soft head of a baby lying where Jack's rough head was now nestling, and her heart swelled within her.

"Now then," she said, pouring out some drops and giving them to her, "you jest hush up and go to sleep, honey. Miss Dorcas and I, we'll fix up this 'ere. It'll all come straight—now you'll see it will. Why, de Lord ain't gwine to let you starve. Never see de righteous forsaken. Jest go to sleep honey, and it'll be all right when you wake up."

Meanwhile, Miss Dorcas had gone across the way to consult with Eva. The opening of the friendship on the opposite side of the way had been a relief to her from the desolateness and loneliness of her life circle, and she had come to that degree of friendly reliance that she felt she could state her dilemma and ask advice.

"I don't see any way but I must come to selling the house at last," said Miss Dorcas; "but I don't know how to set about it; and if we have to leave, at our age, life won't seem worth having. I'm afraid it would kill Betsey."

"Dear Miss Dorcas, we can't afford to loose you," said Eva. "You don't gentility that made them attractive; and her artist imagination at once went into the work of brightening up their tarnished and dusky respectability with a nice little modern addition of pictures and flowers, and new bits of furniture here and there.

Just as she returned from her survey, she found Jim in her own parlor, wity a thriving pot of ivy.

"Well, here's one for our parlor window, when we find one," said he. "I'm a boy that gets things when I see them. Now you don't often see an ivy so thrifty as this, and I've brought it to you to take care of till I find the room!"

"Jim," said Eva, "I believe what you want is to be found right across the way from us, so that we can talk across from your windows to ours."

"What! the old Vanderheyden house? Thunder!" said Jim.

Now, Jim was one of the class of boys who make free use of "thunder" in conversation, without meaning to express more by it than a state of slight surprise.

"What's up now?" he added. "I should as soon expect Queen Victoria to rent Buckingham Palace as that the old ladies across the way would come to letting rooms!"

"Necessity has no law, Jim." And then Eva told him Miss Dorcas's misfortune.

"Poor old girls!" said Jim. "I do declare it's too thundering bad. I'll go right over and rent the room; and I'll pay up square, too, and no mistake."

"Shall I go with you?"

"Oh, you just leave that to me. Two are all that are needed in a bargain."

In a few minutes, Jim was at his ease in front of Miss Dorcas saying:

"Miss Dorcas, the fact is I want to hire a suit of rooms. You see, I'm going to have a wife before long, and nothing will suit her so well as this neighborhood. Now, if you will only rent us half of your house, we shall be have so beautifully that you never will be sorry that you took us in."

Miss Dorcas apologized for the rooms and furniture. They were old, she knew—not in modern style—but such as they were, would he just go through them? and Jim made the course with her. And the short of the matter was, that the bargain was soon struck.

Jim stated frankly the sum he felt able to pay for apartments; to Miss

A snicker from the adjacent china-closet, where Dinah was listening, confirmed this statement.

"Why, it's such a nice thing? Why, there's no end to it," said Mrs. Betsey, whose cheerfulness increased with reflection. "A real live man in the house!—and a young man, too!—and such a one; and dear Miss Alice—why only think, bringing all her wedding clothes to the house, and I don't doubt she'll show them all to me—and it'll be so nice for Jack! won't it, Jack?"

Jack barked his assent vigorously, and a second explosive chuckle from the china closet betrayed Dinah's profound sympathy. The faithful creature was rolling and boiling in the waves of triumphant merriment behind the scenes. The conversation of her mistress in fact appeared to be a daily source of amusement to her, and Miss Dorcas was forced to wink at this espionage, in consideration of Dinah's limited sources of entertainment, and generally pretended not to know that she was there.

On the present occasion, Dinah's contribution to the interview was too evident to be ignored, but Miss Dorcas listened to it with indulgence. A good prospect of regular income does, after all, strengthen one's faith in Providence, and dispose one to be easily satisfied with one's fellows.

EVA TO HARRY'S MOTHER.

DEAR MOTHER: You've no idea how things have gone on within a short time. I have been so excited and so busy, and kept in such a state of constant consultation, for this past week, that I have had no time to keep up my bulletins to you.

Well, dear mother, it is at last concluded that we are to have two weddings on one day, the second week after Easter, when Alice is to be married to Jim Fellows, and Angie to Mr. St. John.

Easter comes this year about the latest that it ever does, so that we may hope for sunny spring weather, and at least a few crocuses and hyacinths in the borders, as good omens for the future. I wish you could choose this time to make your long-promised visit and see how gay and festive we all are. Just now, every one is overwhelmed with business, and the days go off very

her young mistress lying weak and faint on that same spot, and how there had been the soft head of a baby lying where Jack's rough head was now nestling, and her heart swelled within her.

"Now then," she said, pouring out some drops and giving them to her, "you jest hush up and go to sleep, honey. Miss Dorcas and I, we'll fix up this 'ere. It'll all come straight—now you'll see it will. Why, de Lord ain't gwine to let you starve. Never see de righteous forsaken. Jest go to sleep honey, and it'll be all right when you wake up."

Meanwhile, Miss Dorcas had gone across the way to consult with Eva. The opening of the friendship on the opposite side of the way had been a relief to her from the desolateness and loneliness of her life circle, and she had come to that degree of friendly reliance that she felt she could state her dilemma and ask advice.

"I don't see any way but I must come to selling the house at last," said Miss Dorcas; "but I don't know how to set about it; and if we have to leave, at our age, life won't seem worth having. I'm afraid it would kill Betsey."

"Dear Miss Dorcas, we can't afford to loose you," said Eva. "You don't know what a comfort it is to have you over there, so nice and handy—why, it would be forlorn to have you go; it would break us all up!"

"You are kind to say so," said Miss Dorcas; "but I can't help feeling that the gain of our being there is all on one side."

"But, dear Miss Dorcas, why need you move? See here. A bright thought strikes me. Your house is so large! Why couldn't you rent half of it? You really don't need it all; and I'm sure it could be easily arranged for two families. Do think of that, please."

"If it could be done—if anybody would want it!" said Miss Dorcas.

"Oh, just let us go over this minute and see," said Eva, as she threw a light cloud of worsted over her head, and seizing Miss Dorcas by the arm, crossed back with her, talking cheerfully.

"Here you have it, nice as possible. Your front parlour—you never sit there; and it's only a care to have a room you don't use. And then this great empty office back here—a dining-room all ready! and there is a back shed that could have a cooking stove, and be fitted into kitchen. Why, the thing is perfect; and there's your income without moving a peg! See what it to rent Buckingham Palace as that the old ladies across the way would come to letting rooms!"

"Necessity has no law, Jim." And then Eva told him Miss Dorcas's misfortune.

"Poor old girls!" said Jim. "I do declare it's too thundering bad. I'll go right over and rent the room; and I'll pay up square, too, and no mistake."

"Shall I go with you?"

"Oh, you just leave that to me. Two are all that are needed in a bargain."

In a few minutes, Jim was at his ease in front of Miss Dorcas saying:

"Miss Dorcas, the fact is I want to hire a suit of rooms. You see, I'm going to have a wife before long, and nothing will suit her so well as this neighborhood. Now, if you will only rent us half of your house, we shall be have so beautifully that you never will be sorry that you took us in."

Miss Dorcas apologized for the rooms and furniture. They were old, she knew—not in modern style—but such as they were, would he just go through them? and Jim made the course with her. And the short of the matter was, that the bargain was soon struck.

Jim stated frankly the sum he felt able to pay for apartments; to Miss Dorcas the sum seemed ample enough to relieve all her embarrassments, and in an hour he returned to the other side, having completed the arrangement.

"There, now—we're anchored, I think. The old folks and Aunt Maria have been wanting me to marry and live with them in the old hive, but Jim doesn't put his foot into that trap, if he knows it. My wife and I must have our own establishment, if it's only in two rooms. Now it's all settled, if Allie likes it, and I know she will. By George, it's a lucky hit! That parlor will brighten up capitally."

"You know, old furniture is all the rage now," said Eva, "and you can buy things here and there as you want."

"Yes," said Jim; "you know I did buy a pair of brass andirons when I was going to ask Allie to have me, and they'll be just the thing for the old fireplace over there. Miss Dorcas apologised for the want of those that belonged there, by saying that her brother had taken them apart to try some experiment in brass polishing, and never found time to put them together again, and so parts of them got lost. I told her it was a special providence that I happened to have the very

Aunt Maria is in her glory, as generalissimo of the forces and dictator of all things. It is for just such crises that she was born; she has now fairly enough to manage to keep her contented with everybody, and everybody contented with her—which, by-the-bye, is not always the case in her history.

It is decreed that the wedding is to be a morning one, in Mr. St. John's little chapel; and that, after the reception at mamma's, Jim will start with Alice to visit his family friends, and Angie and St. John will go immediately on the steamer to sail for Europe, where they will spend the summer in travelling and be back again in autumn. Meanwhile, they have engaged a house in that part of the city where their mission work lies, and of course, like curs, it is on an unfashionable street—a thing which grieves Aunt Maria, who takes every occasion to say that Mr. St. John, being a man of independent fortune, is entitled to live genteelly. I am glad, because they are within an easy distance of us, which will be nice. Aunt Maria and mamma are to see to getting the house all ready for them to go into when they return.

And then this great empty office back here—a dining-room all ready! and there is a back shed that could have a cooking stove, and be fitted into kitchen. Why, the thing is perfect; and there's your income without moving a peg! See what it is to have real estate!"

"You are very sanguine," said Miss Dorcas, looking a little brightened herself. "I have often thought myself that the house is a great deal larger than we need; but I am quite helpless about such matters. We are so out of the world. I know nothing of business; real estate agents are my horror; and I have no man to advise me."

"Oh, Miss Dorcas, wait now till I consult Harry. I'm sure something nice could be arranged."

"I dare say," said Mrs. Dorcas, "if these rooms were in a fashionable quarter we might let them; but the world has long since left our house in the rear."

"Never mind that," said Eva. "You see we don't mind fashion, and there may be neighbors as good as we, of the same mind."

Eva already had one of her visions in her head; but of this she did not speak to Miss Dorcas till she had matured it.

She knew that Jim Fellows had been for weeks on the keen chase after apartments, and that none yet had presented themselves as altogether eligible. Alice had insisted on an economical beginning, and the utmost prudence as to price; and the result had been, what is usual in such cases, that all the rooms that would do at all were too dear.

Eva saw at once in this suit of rooms, right across the way from them, the very thing they were in search of. The rooms were large and sunny, with a quaint, old-fashioned air of by-gone times. I put this room into that way, it knows it. My wife and I must have our own establishment, if it's only in two rooms. Now it's all settled, if Allie likes it, and I know she will. By George, it's a lucky hit! That parlor will brighten up capitally."

Miss Dorcas apologised for the want of those that belonged there, by saying that her brother had taken them apart to try some experiment in brass polishing, and never found time to put them together again, and so parts of them got lost. I told her it was a special providence that I happened to have the very pair that were needed there; and there's a splendid sunny window for the ivies on the south corner!"

"That old furniture is lovely," said Eva. "It's like a dark, rich background to a picture. All your little bright modern things will show so well over it."

"Well, I'm going to bring Allie down to go over it, this minute," said Jim, who was not of the class to allow the grass to grow under their feet.

Meanwhile, when Mrs. Betsey came down to dinner, she found the storm over, and clear, shining after rain.

"What, Mr. Fellows!" she exclaimed; "that dear, good young man that was so kind to Jack! Why, Dorcas, what a providence! I'm sure it'll be a mercy to have a man in the house once more!"

"Why, I'm sure," said Miss Dorcas, "your great fear that you wake me up every night about, is that there is a man in the house!"

"Oh, well," said Mrs. Betsey, laughing cheerfully; "you know what I mean. I mean the right kind of a man. I've thought that those dreadful burglars and creatures that break into houses where there's old silver must find us out—because, Dorcas, really, that hat that we keep on the entry table is so big and dusty, and so different from what they wear now, they must know that no man wears a hat like that. I've always told Dinah that—she knows I have, more than twenty times."

be a morning one, in Mr. St. John's little chapel; and that, after the reception at mamma's, Jim will start with Alice to visit his family friends, and Angie and St. John will go immediately on the steamer to sail for Europe, where they will spend the summer in travelling and be back again in autumn. Meanwhile, they have engaged a house in that part of the city where their mission work lies, and of course, like ours, it is on an unfashionable street—a thing which grieves Aunt Maria, who takes every occasion to say that Mr. St. John, being a man of independent fortune, is entitled to live genteelly. I am glad, because they are within an easy distance of us, which will be nice. Aunt Maria and mamma are to see to getting the house all ready for them to go into when they return.

Bolton is going over with them, to visit Paris! The fact is, since I opened communication between him and Caroline, her letters to me have grown short and infrequent, and her letters to him long and constant, and the effect on him has been magical. I have never seen him in such good spirits. Those turns of morbid depression that he used to have, seem to be fading away gradually. He has been with us so much that I feel almost as if he were a member of our family, and I cannot but feel that our home has been a shelter and a strength to him. What would it be to have a happy one of his own? I am sure he deserves it, if ever kindness, unselfishness, and true nobleness of heart deserved it; and I am sure that Caroline is wise enough and strong enough to give him just the support that he needs.

Then there's Alice's engagement to Jim. I have long foreseen to what her friendship for him would grow, and though she had many hesitations, yet now she is perfectly happy in it; and only think how nice it is! They are to take half the old Vanderheyden house, opposite to us, so that we can see the lights of each other's hearths across from each other's windows.

Mother, doesn't it seem as if our bright, cosy, happy, free-and-easy home was throwing out as many side-shoots as a lilac bush?

Just think; in easy vicinity, we shall have Jim and Alice, Angie and St. John, and, as I believe, Bolton and Caroline. We shall be a guild of householders, who hold the same traditions, walk by the same rule, and true

And it is not merely having good times either; but mother, the more I think of it, the more I think the making of bright, happy homes, is the best way of helping on the world that has been discovered yet. A home is a thing that can't be for one's own self alone—at least the kind of home we are thinking of; it reaches out on all sides and helps and shelters and comforts others. Even my little experiment of a few months ago shows me that; and I know that Angie's and St. John's home will be even more so than ours. Angie was born to be a rector's wife; to have a kind word and a kind smile, and a good deed for everybody, to love everybody dearly, and keep ever bright and in good spirits. It is amazing to see the change she has wrought in St. John. He was fast getting into a sort of stringent, morbid asceticism; now he is so gracious, so genial, and so entertaining—he is like a rock, in June, all bursting out with anemones and columbines in every rift.

As to Jim and Alice, you ought to see how happy they are in consulting me about the arrangements of their future home in the Vanderheyden House. And the best of it is, to see how perfectly delighted the two old ladies are to have them there. You must know that there was a sudden failure in Miss Dorcas's income which would have made it necessary to sell the house had it not been for just this arrangement. But they are as gracious and kind about it as if they were about to receive guests; and every improvement and every additional touch of brightness to the rooms seems to please them as much as if they were going to be married themselves.

Miss Dorcas said to me that our coming to live in their neighbourhood had been the greatest blessing to them that ever had happened for years—that it had opened a new life to them.

As to Maggie, dear mother, she is becoming a real comfort to me. I do think that all the poor girls sorrows and sufferings have not been in vain, and that she is now a true and humble Christian.

She has been very useful in this sudden hurry of work that has fallen upon us, and seems really delighted to be so.

more of two! So Aunt Maria stepped at once into command by acclamation, and addressed herself to her work as a strong man to run a race; and win! Angie and St. John spent blissful hours in the back parlour, and Jim and Alice monopolised the library. Aunt Maria flew all over New York, and arranged about all the towels and table-cloths and napkins and doilies, down to the very dish cloths. She overlooked armies of sewing women, milliners and mantua-makers—the most slippery of all mortal creatures—and drove them all up to have each her quota in time. She with Mrs. Van Arsdel, made lists of people to be invited, and busied herself with getting samples and terms from fancy stationers for the wedding cards. She planned in advance all the details of the wedding feast, and engaged the cake and fruit and ice cream.

Nor did she forget the social and society exigencies of the crisis.

She found time, dressed in her best, to take Mr. Van Arsdel in full panoply to return the call of Mrs. Dr. Gracey, who had come, promptly and properly, with the doctor, to recognise Miss Angelique and felicitate about the engagement of their nephew.

She arranged for a dinner party to be given by Mrs. Van Arsdel, where the doctor and his lady were to be received into family alliance, and testimonies of high consideration accorded to them. Aunt Maria took occasion, in private converse with Mrs. Dr. Gracey, to assure her of her very great esteem and respect for Mr. St. John, and her perfect conviction that he was on the right road now, and that, though he might possibly burn a few more candles in his chapel, yet, when he came fully under family influence, they would gradually be snuffed out,—intimating that she intended to be aunt, not only to Arthur, but to his chapel and mission-work.

The extraordinary and serene meekness with which that young divine left every question of form and etiquette to her management, and the sort of dazed humility with which he listened to all her rulings about the arrangement of the wedding day, had inspired in Aunt Maria's mind such hopes of his docility as led to these very sanguine anticipations.

It is true that, when it came to the question of renting a house, she found him quietly but unalterably set on a small and modest little mansion in

though it must be admitted that Eva was a very difficult person to keep up a long quarrel with.

But just at this hour, when the whole family were at her feet, when it was her voice that decided every question, when she knew where everything was and was to be, and when everything was to be done, she was too well pleased to be unamiable, she was the spirit of the whole affair, and she planned herself joyously when all the callers at the house said to Mrs. Van Arsdel, "Dear me! what would you do if it were not for your sister?" Verily she had her reward.

CHAPTER LII.

EVA'S CONSULTATIONS.

"Now see here," said Jim, coming to Eva as she sat alone in her parlour, "I've got something on my mind I want to talk with you about. You see, Alice and I are to be married at the same time with Angie and St. John."

"Yes, I see it."

"Well, Jim, what makes you think there will be prayer-book with the variations?"

"Oh, well, I attended a ritualistic wedding once, and there was such an amount of processing and chanting, and ancient and modern improvements, that it was just like a show. There were the press reporters elbowing and pushing to get the best places to write it up for the papers, and for my part, I think it's in confounded bad taste, and I couldn't stand it; you know, now, I'm a nervous fellow. If I've got to take part in the exercises, they'll have to 'draw it mild', or Alice and I will have to secede and take it by ourselves. I couldn't go such a thing as that wedding; I never should come out alive."

"Well, Jim, I don't believe there's any reason for apprehension. In the first place, the ceremony, as to its mode and form, always is supposed to be conducted according to the preferences of the bride's family, and we all of us

ting into a sort of stringent, morbid scepticism; now he is so gracious, so genial, and so entertaining—he is like a rock, in June, all bursting out with anemones and columbines in every rift.

She has been very useful in this sudden hurry of work that has fallen upon us, and seems really delighted to be so. In our group of families, Maggie will always find friends. Angie wants her to come and live with them when they begin housekeeping, and I think I shall let her go.

I shall never forget the dreadful things I saw the night I went after her. They have sunk deep into my heart; and I hope, mother, I see more clearly the deepest and noblest purpose of life, so as never again to forget it.

But, meantime, a thousand little cares break and futter themselves on my heart, like waves on a rock. Everybody is running to me, every hour. I am consulted, sympathizer and adviser, from the shape of a bow and the positions of trimming; up to the profoundest questions of casuistry. They all talk to me, and I divide my heart among them all, and so the days fly by with frightful rapidity, and I fear I shall get little time to write, so pray come and see for yourself.

It is true that, when it came to the question of renting a house, she found him quietly but unalterably set on a small and modest little mansion in the unfashionable neighborhood where his work lay.

"Arthur is going on with his mission," said Angelique, "and I'm going to help him, and we must live where we can do most good"—a reason to which Aunt Maria was just now too busy to reply, but she satisfied herself by discussing at length the wedding affairs with Mrs. Dr. Gracey.

"Of course, Mrs. Gracey," she said, "we all feel that if dear Dr. Gracey is to conduct the wedding services, everything will be in the good old way; there will be nothing objectionable or unusual."

"Oh, you may rely on that, Mrs. Wouwermans," replied the lady. "The doctor is not the man to run after novelties; he's a good old-fashioned Episcopalian. Though he always has been very indulgent to Arthur, he thinks as our dear bishop does, that if young men are left to themselves, and not fettered by opposition, they will gradually outgrow these things."

"Precisely so," said Aunt Maria;

You see, Alice and I are to be married at the same time with Angie and St. John."

"Yes, I see it."

"Well, now, what I want to say is that I really hope there won't be anything longer and harder and more circumlocutory to be got through with on the occasion than just what's in the prayer-book, for that's all I can stand, I can't stand prayer-book with variations, now, I really can't."

"I'm glad to hear that," said Jim.

"And then, Jim, Mr. St. John's uncle, Dr. Gracey, is to perform the ceremony, and he is one of the most respected of the conservative Episcopal clergymen in New York; and it is entirely out of the question to suppose that he would take part in anything of the sort you fear, or which would excite comment as an innovation. Then again, I think Mr. St. John himself has so much natural refinement and just taste that he would not wish his wedding to become a theme for gossip and a gazing stock for the curious."

"Well, I didn't know about St. John. I was a little afraid we should be obliged to do something or other, because they did it in the catacombs, or the Middle Ages, or in Edward the Sixth's time, or some such dodge. I thought I'd just make sure."

CHAPTER LI.

THE HOUR AND THE WOMAN.

It is said that Queen Elizabeth could converse in five languages, and dictate to three secretaries at once, in different tongues, with the greatest ease and composure.

Perhaps it might have been so—let us not quarrel with her laurels; it only shows what woman can do if they set about it, and is not a whit more remarkable than Aunt Maria's triumphant management of all the details of two weddings at one time.

That estimable individual has not, we fear, always appeared to advantage in this history, and it is due to her now to say that nobody that saw her proceedings could help feeling the beauty of the right person in the right place.

Many a person is held to be a pest and a nuisance because there isn't enough to be done to use up his capabilities. Aunt Maria had a passion for superintending and directing, and all that was wanting to bring things right was an occasion when a good deal of superintendence and direction was wanting.

The double wedding in the family just fulfilled all the conditions. It now opened a field to her that everybody was more than thankful to have her occupy.

Lovers, we all know, are, ex-officio, ranked among the incapables; and it, while they were mooning round in the fairy-land of sentiment, some good strong, active, practical head, were not at work upon the details of real life, nothing would be on time at the wedding. Now, if this be true of one wedding, how much with Mrs. Dr. Gracey.

"Of course, Mrs. Gracey," she said, "we all feel that if dear Dr. Gracey is to conduct the wedding services, everything will be in the good old way; there will be nothing objectionable or unusual."

"Oh, you may rely on that, Mrs. Wouwermans," replied the lady. "The doctor is not the man to run after novelties; he's a good old-fashioned Episcopalian. Though he always has been very indulgent to Arthur, he thinks as our dear bishop does, that if young men are left to themselves, and not fettered by opposition, they will gradually outgrow these things."

"Precisely so," said Aunt Maria; "just what I have always thought. For my part I always said that it was safe to trust the bishop."

Did Aunt Maria believe this? She certainly appeared to. She sincerely supposed that this was what she had thought and said, and quite forgot the times she used to wonder "what our bishop could be thinking of, to let things go so."

It was one blessed faculty of this remarkable woman that she generally came to the full conviction of the axiom that "whatever is, is right," and took up and patronized anything that would succeed in spite of her best efforts to prevent it.

So, in announcing the double wedding to her fashionable acquaintance, she placed every thing, as the popular saying is, best foot foremost.

Mr. Fellows was a young man of fine talents, and great industry and elegant manners, a great favourite in society, and likely to take the highest rank in his profession. Alice had refused richer offers—she might perhaps have done better in a worldly point of view, but it was purely a love match, &c., &c. And Mr. St. John, a young man of fine family and independent fortune, who might command all the elegancies of life, was going to live in a distant and obscure quarter, to labor in his work. These facts brought forth, of course, bursts of sympathy and congratulation, and Aunt Maria went off on the top of the wave.

Eva had but done her aunt justice when she told her mother that Aunt Maria would be all the more amiable for the firm stand which the young wife had taken against any interference with her family matters. It was so. Aunt Maria was as balmy to Eva as if that discussion had never taken place, clergymen in New York; and it is entirely out of the question to suppose that he would take part in anything of the sort you fear, or which would excite comment as an innovation. Then again, I think Mr. St. John himself has so much natural refinement and just taste that he would not wish his wedding to become a theme for gossip and a gazing stock for the curious."

"Well, I think Mr. St. John has gone as far in those directions as he ever will go. He has been living alone up to this winter. He has formed his ideas by himself in solitude. Now he will have another half to himself; he will see in part through the eyes, and feel through the heart, of a sensible and discreet woman—for Angie is that. The society he has met at our house in such men as Dr. Campbell and others, has enlarged his horizon—given him new points of vision—so that I think the too great tendencies he may have had in certain directions have been insensibly checked."

"I wish they may," said Jim, "for he is a good fellow, and so much like one of the primitive Christians that I really want him to get all the credit that belongs to him."

"Oh, well, you'll see, Jim. When a man is so sincere and good, and labours with a good wife to help him, you'll see the difference. But here comes little Mrs. Betsey, Jim. I promised to get her up a cap for the occasion."

"Well, I'm off; only be sure you make matters secure about the ceremony," and off went Jim, and in came little Mrs. Betsey.

"It's good of you, dear Mrs. Henderson, to undertake to make me presentable. You know Dorcas hasn't the least interest in these things. Dorcas is so independent she never cares what the fashion is. Now, she isn't doing a thing to get ready. She's just going in that satin gown that she had made twenty years ago, with a great lace collar as big as a platter; and she sits there just as easy, reading 'Pope's Essay on Man,' and here I'm all in a worry; but I can't help it."

CARE FOR THE BOYS.

Yes, father and mother, it is your boys that need your most thoughtful care! It seems to be instinctive with parents to shield their girls from evil, to keep them out of the sight and sound of sinful things. What mother would rest when evening comes, if her little daughter were at large in the street frequenting the village store, or hanging about the door of the drinking-saloon. How many times is the son of ten years old away from the sight and sound of the mother at nightfall, breathing in a worse malaria than that of stagnant pools from the rude talk of older boys, or of coarse, vulgar men. Outgrow it, will they? Do they? Now and then, a boy poisoned in childhood by vicious associates, does live down the poison and comes out a clean, pure man; but look over any community in search of the young men without guile whose souls and bodies are clean, and are they the sole or the exception? Scrutinize the sisters of these same young men, and do you expect to find the spotless among them, the rule or the exception? It is the curse of the world that its boys are cherished less sacredly than its girls! that their whose temptations and physical vices are strongest have the least done to fortify them against evil. Do not say that because of the difference in their natures, boys and girls cannot be trained by the same standard of morality. It is a base libel upon manhood, fostered so long in the world that it has come almost to be believed. If boys have greater temptations so have they stronger powers when only cultivated. But too often they are wholly neglected. Do not trust to the future to bring your boys out right, for it will almost certainly bring them out scarred! Neither trust to their being above temptation, for the infants of angels and archangels would in their infancy be subject to temptation! Know always where they are, and what they are doing and what are their inmost thoughts; and this, not by a prying, tyrannical oversight of their movements but by such a loving, yearning interest for their well-being, that they love to open

FEMALE EDUCATION.

At the annual distribution of prizes at the Female Normal School, Quebec, on the 26th inst., His Excellency the Governor General was present, and in reply to an address from the pupils, delivered the following sensible address which should be written in golden letters on the walls of every Female Collegiate Institute in Canada:

"We who are anxious about the welfare of our country have great satisfaction in considering that there should exist in the various provinces of Canada such an admirable machinery furnished by these Normal schools for the diffusion of an atmosphere of cheerfulness, elegant purity, and intellectual activity in the homes of the nation. This is especially true as applied to the women teachers of our schools, for it is on them we must depend for the maintenance of a proper standard of good manners, of refinement, and of that high moral tone of which these qualities are the outcome; and I trust you will always remember that the execution of this portion of your functions is not less imperative upon you than are the other branches of your profession. And in relation to this particular part of your duties there is one peculiarity I have observed in this country, though not indigenous but imported, which I think you might use your influence advantageously to correct. I observe that it is an almost universal practice upon this continent, even on public occasions, in prize lists, roll calls, and in the interior of general society, for young ladies to be alluded to by their casual acquaintances, nay, even in the newspapers, by what in the old country we would call their pet name. That is to say, those caressing, soft applications of endearment with which their fathers and mothers, and those who are nearest to them, strive to give expression to the yearning affection they feel for them in the home circle. Now it seems to me to be a monstrous sacrilege, and quite incompatible with the dignity and self-respect due to the daughters of our land, and with the chivalrous reference with which they should be approached, even in thought, that the tender, love-invented nomenclature of the fireside should be bandied about at random in the mouths of every empty-headed Tom, Dick and

MATTER AND MIND.

PROFESSOR TYNDAL.—and the formidable clique of scientists of whom he stands at the head, have, during the last quarter of a century, brought about quite a decided change as bearing upon the previous investigations of scientists in regard to the nature and functions of matter. This formidable array of materialists have it is manifest (in their own opinion) sounded the "depths profound" of the material world, and have, for years past, been intensely engaged in bringing to the surface secrets in regard thereto, as interesting as they are absolutely astounding. They do not, it is true, distinctly give out that mind is matter (at least Professor Tyndal does not), yet is it plainly to be seen that, in their molecular system, they flatter themselves they have discovered the true source and essence of consciousness and cogitation. As we have intimated, however, Mr. Tyndall (the master-spirit of the materialistic clique) has, till now, been exceedingly careful not to commit himself outright to the daring conclusion that the soul of man is a mere material substance. He ventures to state that, "for every fact or consciousness, whether in the domain of sense of thought, or of emotion a definite molecular condition of motion or structure is set up in the brain." For instance, in the United States, before her marriage, I observed that Miss Grant, the daughter of the occupant of one of the most august positions in the world, was generally referred to in the papers as "Nellie," as though the paragraphist who wrote the item had been her playfellow from infancy: and even Lady Dufferin, I see, has become "Kate" in the elegant phraseology of a United States magazine. Though how "Kate" could have been elicited from Her Excellency's real Christian name, I don't know. Of course, this is a small matter to which I have alluded, but it is not without significance when regarded as a national characteristic. After all, the women of this continent are ladies as refined, high minded and noble hearted, as are to be found in any country in the world, and the sooner we get rid of this vulgar socialism the better, and the first place where the correction should be made is in our school lists, which are official documents, where young ladies ought to be entered in their full Christian names, and not in their "nick-names," as I have often seen done.

The "decay of authority," about which we hear a great deal, is a decay of authority which has its basis not in the right nature of things, but in pretense and sham. PROFESSOR TYNDAL.—and the formidable clique of scientists of whom he stands at the head, have, during the last quarter of a century, brought about quite a decided change as bearing upon the previous investigations of scientists in regard to the nature and functions of matter. This formidable array of materialists have it is manifest (in their own opinion) sounded the “depths profound” of the material world, and have, for years past, been intensely engaged in bringing to the surface secrets in regard thereto, as interesting as they are absolutely astounding. They do not, it is true, distinctly give out that mind is matter (at least Professor Tyndall does not), yet is it plainly to be seen that, in their molecular system, they flatter themselves they have discovered the true source and essence of consciousness and cogitation. As we have intimated, however, Mr. Tyndall (the master-spirit of the materialistic clique) has, till now, been exceedingly careful not to commit himself outright” to the daring conclusion that the soul of man is mere material substance. He ventures to state that, “for every fact or consciousness, whether in the domain of sense of thought, or of emotion a definite molecular condition of motion or structure is set up in the brain.” The relation of physics to consciousness, the Professor maintains to be a self-evident fact—and we are ready to concede the point—but that “a definite molecular action, and definite thought in the brain,” are convertible phrases, and bear the same meaning, our common-sense instincts force us to deny. Ay, and keen of penetration as the Professor is, and talented beyond the most prilliant of his associates, it will require a still porfounder view of molecular phenomena on his part than he has yet achieved (and his discoveries in this respect have been astounding) to point out where the functions of mere matter cease, and consciousness and cogitation commence. The Professor is magnanimous enough to admit, that “though a definite thought and a definite molecular action in the brain occur simultaneously, we do not possess the intellectual organ, nor spparently any rudiment of the organ which would enable us to pass, by a process of reasoning, from one to the other.” What we consider the most admirable trait in Professor Tyndall’s character—a trait which he invariably betrays in his philosophical researches—is his candor and honesty.

even Lady Dufferin, I see, has become “Kate” in the elegant phraseology of a United States magazine. Though how “Kate” could have been elicited from Her Excellency’s real Christian name, I don’t know. Of course, this is a small matter to which I have alluded, but it is not without significance when regarded as a national characteristic. After all, the women of this continent are ladies as refined, high minded and noble hearted, as are to be found in any country in the world, and the sooner we get rid of this vulgar socialism the better, and the first place where the correction should be made is in our school lists, which are official documents, where young ladies ought to be entered in their full Christian names, and not in their “nick-names,” as I have often seen done.

DECAY OF RELIGIOUS AUTHORITY.

The “decay of authority,” about which we hear a great deal, is a decay of authority which has its basis not in the right nature of things, but in pretense and sham. The trouble with the whole theory of an infallible church, Romish or Protestant, is that men are finding out that it is a myth and not a reality. The time has gone by when a monopoly of truth was conceded to the clergy. Gown and band no longer constitute their wearer an oracle. Democracy is taking possession of the religious as well as the political world. But in neither sphere does democracy mean the subversion of authority. It means the overthrow of factitious authority; the denial of any right to govern based on accident of birth or circumstance. But democracy does not mean anarchy or mob law. Its first stage, politically, is to vest all power in the people; its next, which we are now trying to reach, is the selection by the people of the men most fit to conduct the public business. So of religious democracy; it means first the absolute denial of “divine right” vested in either bishops or presbyters or congregations, the absolute right to every man to seek truth in his own way. But nothing can remove that fact fixed in the very nature of things, by which men acknowledge and follow the natural leadership of merit.

It is reported at Ottawa that France has admitted that all territorial rights on the shore of Newfoundland belong to great Britain, who undertakes to preserve law; while French fishermen are to be allowed to use the beach for drying fish.

Centennial Christian Homes.

THE great number of visitors in Philadelnecessitates the opening of private homes for board and lodging. Many Christian families, who are unwilling to open their doors to a prom-

which they give admission to Christians and their friends. This will be equally pleasant to Christian people abroad who may not wish to be associated with the great variety of charac-

boarding-houses.

In order to have this select class the price of board is generally much lower than prevails by other arrangements, varying from $5 to $14 a

THE BLACK HILLS.

TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER OF U. S. TROOPS.
—A FORTY-EIGHT HOURS FIGHT.

Chicago, June 7.—A special to the Times from Bismarck recounts the late encounter with the Indians. On the morning of the 25th an Indian village, twenty miles above the mouth of Little Horn, was reported about three miles long and half a mile wide and fifteen miles away. Custer pushed his command rapidly through. They had made a march of seventy-eight miles in 24 hours, preceding the battle.

When near the village it was discovered that the Indians were moving in hot haste, as if retreating.

Reno, with seven companies of the 7th cavalry, was ordered to the left to attack the village at its head, while Custer, with five companies, went to the right and commenced a vigorous attack.

Reno fell on them with three companies of cavalry and was almost instantly surrounded, and after one hour or more of vigorous fighting, during which he lost Lieuts. Hodson and McIntosh, and Dr. Dewolf and twelve men, with several Indian scouts killed and many wounded. He cut his way through the river and gained a bluff 300 feet in height where he entrenched and was soon joined by Col. Benton, with four companies.

In the meantime the Indians resumed the attack, making repeated and desperate charges which were repulsed with great slaughter to the Indians. They gained higher ground than Reno occupied, and as the arms were longer in range and better than the Cavalry's, they kept up a fire until night fall. During the night Reno strengthened his position and was prepared for another attack, which was made at daylight. The day wore on, Reno had lost in killed and wounded a large portion of his command, forty odd having been killed before the bluff was reached. Many of them in a hand to hand conflict with the Indians, who outnumbered them 10 to 1, and his men had been without water for 36 hours.

The suffering was heartrending. In this state of affairs they determined to reach the water at all hazards, and Col. Benton made a rally with his Company and routed the main body of the Indians, who were guarding the approach to the river.

The Indian sharp shooters were nearly opposite the mouth of the ravine through which the brave boys approached the river, but the attempt was made, and though one man was killed and seven wounded the water was gained and the command relieved.

When the fighting ceased for the night, Reno further prepared for attacks. There had been forty-eight hours fighting with no word from Custer, twenty-four hours more of fighting and the suspense ended, when the Indians abandoned their village in

Gen. Terry Gibbon commanding his own infantry, had arrived. Soon an officer came rushing into camp and related that he had found Custer dead, stripped naked but not mutilated, and near him his two brothers Col. Tom and Boston Custer, his brother-in-law Col. Calhoun and his nephew Col. Yates, Col. Keough, Capt. Smith, Lieut. Crittenden, Lieut. Sturgis, Col. Cooks, Lieut. Porter, Lieut. Harrington, Dr. Lord Mack Kellogg, the Bismarck Tribune correspondent and 190 men and scouts, only one Crow scout remained to tell the tale. "All are dead."

Custer was surrounded on ever side by Indians and horses and fell as they fought on the skirmish line or in line of battle. Custer was among the last who fell, but when his cheering voice was no longer heard, the Indians made easy work of the remainder.

The bodies of all, save the newspaper correspondent, were stripped, and most of them were horribly mutilated. Custer was not mutilated. He was shot through the body and through the head.

Col. Smith arrived at Bismarck Wednesday night, with 35 of the wounded. The Indians lost heavily in the battle. The village numbered 1800 lodges, and it is thought there were 4,000 warriors.

Gen. Custer was directed by Gen. Terry to find and feel for the Indians but not to fight unless Terry arrived with the infantry and with Gibbons' column. The casualties foot up 260 killed and 52 wounded.

A locomotive without furnace has commenced running in Paris on one of the street railways. It has a reservoir of superheated water, which furnishes a constant supply of steam for moving the vehicle. This vessel, it will be remembered, was abandoned on the high seas by her commander, Captain Roussan, and afterwards picked up by a couple of English steamers, and carried safely into an English port. The Court of Appeals has decided that the steamer Amerique was lost, not through any defect in her construction or equipment, nor yet through stress of weather but simply "through the fault of the captain and crew, through bad handling and through an inadequate acquaintance with her steamengines and the working of her pumps." The Court has been obliged to company's bills of of lading, which frees the company from responsibility in case of accidents resulting from any fault of the captain: but it holds the insurance companies liable, as these companies insure freighters against risks arising out of the misconduct or barratry of the master of the vessel.

A despatch from Rome, June 21, says:—There was a very curious scene to-day at the Vatican. The Pope, with many Cardinals, received a large body of German pilgrims, who had just received the Eucharist from the hands of Cardinal Ledochowski at the high altar in St. Peter's and then prayed at the Apostles' tomb in the crypt. Baron Loe read a Latin address denouncing tyrannical laws against the Church as a Satanic war against morality. An immense number of various objects were then presented to the Pope, including chalices, vestments, and linen in great quantities for the use and service of the altar also a very considerable sum of money. The Voce reports that he spoke of Antiochus and his ending, and made some terrible comparisons. The Pope's voice is still powerful; it filled the large hall. Then the Germans begged to sing to him one of their German hymns, and when that was finished they gave a German hurrah, "Es lebe Pius IX; hoch!" with three times three. German cheering is a strange sound in the halls of the Vatican.

HORRIBLE RAILWAY ACCI- DENT.

Paris, Ont., Oct. 5.—This morning at 1 o'clock one of the most distressing and disastrous accidents
that has taken place on the Great Western Railway for a number of years, occurred to the night mail east, conductor Brown, due at Paris at about 12:55, about a mile and a half
west of Princeton station, the particulars of which are as follows:
The traffic of late has been so heavy that it has been found necessary to run two engines on the through trains, and last night was no exception, for on this train's arrival at London two engines were attached thereto—No. 119, Williams of Suspension Bridge, driver, and No. 25, Wm. Cooper of London, driver. The train rightly belonged to Cooper, Williams running as pilot. The train left at 12:5 a.m., consisting of a baggage and express car, one second class, four first-class, and four Wagner sleeping coaches. It was a little late leaving, but the regular running
time was made all the way down.
Shortly after passing Goble's Corners,
and while proceeding down a moderate grade at the usual speed, one of
the under wheels of the front engine
broke in two, and the broken half
falling on the track, threw the second
engine off the track. Engineer Williams says Cooper sounded the down
brake sharply three times, and the
passengers say they felt the air brakes
with which the train was supplied,
put sharply on. Williams, on looking round to see what was the matter, saw Cooper's engine dancing
over the ties, and then make a dive

to contemplate is that the passengers
all escaped for beyond a few trifling bruises and cuts not one of the two hundred and fifty passengers on the train received injury. The accident appears to have been one that no human foresight could have guarded against, for an examination of the broken wheel showed it to be perfectly sound without flaw or defect, and although the cars were badly knocked about the fact of their being supplied with Miller's patent coupler and buffer may be contributed to the safety of the large number of people on board. The track was blocked for over twelve hours.

nounces that Hon. Mr. Cartwright will shortly sail for England.

ner sleeping coaches. It was a little
late leaving, but the regular running
time was made all the way down.
Shortly after passing Goble's Corners,
and while proceeding down a moderate grade at the usual speed, one of
the under wheels of the front engine
broke in two, and the broken half
falling on the track, threw the second
engine off the track. Engineer Williams says Cooper sounded the down
brake sharply three times, and the
passengers say they felt the air brakes
with which the train was supplied,
put sharply on. Williams, on looking round to see what was the matter, saw Cooper's engine dancing
over the ties, and then make a dive
to one side, tearing itself away from the forward engine also. The train then made one fearful plunge into the swamp at the side of the track, the embankment there being about ten feet in height. The engine landed on the side forty feet away, destroying a portion of the tender which,
was turned completely round, and beneath it, lying close together, were found the dead bodies of Cooper and fireman, A. Irving, horribly bruised.
The three first cars rolled on between the engine and the track, and before the parties on the train could gather their wits about them, the baggage car took fire, and this and two other cars were soon wrapped in flames. In the baggage and express car were Andrews, express messenger, Wright, baggage master, and a Canadian passenger who was going
east to attend his mother's funeral,
but whose name we are unable to learn definitely at this hour of writing. If they were not instantly killed they met a more horrible end by being burnt up. In the morning nothing but their charred remains were left to tell that they had been human beings, and it is said it was only by their watches that it was possible to identify their remains.
Then came one first class car sitting straight on the track with the trucks ripped from under it; then the next car lying at right angles across the track; then the next pitched on end
down into the dry swamp with such force that the earth was ploughed up against it as high as the end of the car. The first sleeping car "Paris"
was straight on the track, but the running gear was all torn from under
it. The other sleepers were safe. It been opened at Belleville, by the Ladies of Loretto.

THE STEEL RAILS.—The Kingston
"News" says: "A large quantity of the steel rails bought by Mr. Mackenzie are still resting and rusting on the Penitentiary wharf.

A NEW BELL.—Mr. Mottashed, of Picton, has presented the new M. E.
Church of that town with an excellent bell, weighing over 1,300 pounds.
It was placed in [its] position last week.

The Assizes for the County of Hastings begins its session at Belleville on Monday next. As usual, the docket is a large one. Hastings County seems to be a paradise for lawyers.

BELLEVILLE GROWING.—The Belleville assessors report the population of the town at 9,712, being an increase of over 400 since last spring.
Application has been made for an incorporation as a city.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The following changes are to be made in stations:—The Rev. F. L. Stevenson, of Sterling, to Carrying Place;
the Rev. E. H. M. Baker, of Carrying Place, to Tyendinaga, and the Rev. T. Stanton, of Tyendinaga, to Trenton, as assistant to Canon Bleasdell. A fine bell has been procured for St. Peter's Church, Brockville, by Canon Mulock.

The Picton "New Nation" says:
—"Potatoes are a small crop this season, and they are therefore very scarce on the market. They are also a very light crop in other parts of the country, and prices may be expected to rule high before the close of the season. Many of the cheese factories have closed, and grass having taken a splendid start since the last rains, butter may be expected to be more plentiful on the market.
Prices still keep up, however, and twenty cents is readily given for rolls—good."

It is time the sport of kite flying was put a stop to in the streets, or serious accidents may occur from them. Yesterday afternoon, while Mrs. Cartwright was out driving, the horses attached to her carriage were frightened by a kite and started off.

was discovered, on examination, that Cooper's engine just ran five rail
lengths before it made the fatal
plunge, and yet in that time he whistled for brakemen three times, and set his own brakes on. His act of bravery was closed by immediate death, for no one seeing the place
whence he was taken and his remains could for a moment doubt that his death was instantaneous. Word was at once conveyed to Princeton and the auxiliary cars from both London and Hamilton were speedily
on the scene, bringing with them Superintendent Dawson and other officials with medical aid. As soon as possible the bodies were recovered
and conveyed to Princeton station,
where an inquest will be held at once.

The three burnt bodies were placpacking case. The passengers on the train were transferred and sent on east while the other trains after some delay, were sent on west by way of the Grand Trunk from Paris. The not seriously hurting her. The harness was badly damaged, and the

ities will take this matter in hand,
so as to prevent a repetition. It is not many years since a lady came to her death from this very cause, and a similar affair might have occured yesterday.—"Kingston Daily

A BUNTING GOAT.—A couple of ladies coming from service in St.
Mary's Cathedral were placed in an embarrassing position by being con-bunting goat. They had advanced quite close to it before they perceiv-

hushed, and "chewed" to no avail, the artful dodger keeping his head swinging from side to side, and threatening to do mischief with his curly horns. The climax was reached when, by an eccentric movement, he penned the pair of church goers back and back against the fence and for a few minutes oscillated his head in such a way that neither could safely move, while the ladies talked in the kindest goat language in hopes that the capering animal would desist. One shook her prayer book at the belligerent chap, but he only released his prisoners when he had apparently enjoyed himself to the full.—"Whig."

THE AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITION.—Hon. James Skeed and Mr. J. M. Currier, M. P., have decided to send a consignment of sawn and manufactured lumber to the exhibition at Sidney, Australia, next April.

MINING.—We understand that Mr. Crevaling, the managing director of the Glendower company, has opened an iron mine on the farm of Mr. Morris, near Delta. Some thirty men will be employed. The ore will be shipped by way of the Rideau Canal to Kingston.—"Whig."

Ottawa Sept. 30.—The Canada Gazette contains the following notice: No person shall catch, kill, possess or sell white fish in Ontario between the first and tenth days of November in each year, nor salmon trout between the fifteenth of September and the first of May.

KENNETH MCKENZIE.—Mr. K. McKenzie, Q. C., at one time the County Judge of this County, has just been appointed County Judge of York County. He is a gentleman of fine ability, and has done a large amount of party work. He was deserving of a more important appointment.—"Whig."

A SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—A telegram from Bathurst, N. B., gives the following particulars of a sad drowning case:—"The lighthouse-keeper of Carquet Island, named Narcise Poilier, and his son, were drowned on Monday last, by the capsizing of the boat while going from the main land to the island to attend the light. It is a strange coincidence that last year, about the same time, the lighthouse-keeper, named Kerr, and his son, were drowned at the same place, and almost under the same circumstances."

TO THE POINT.—The letter-stealing cry is still heard at times. Sir John himself talks of being put out of office by having desks broken open, and letters and telegrams filched. Did it never occur to him that an honest ruler could not be deposed by any such means? He might be anxious to keep his own secrets, it is true; but there must be something rotter in the state of Denmark when the exposure of those secrets revealed such a state of things that an indignant country spurned him from his seat. Honest men fear not the law

To the Editor EXPRESS:

San Francisco, Cal., Sep. 30th, '76.

Having promised before starting on my journey westward to the Pacific Coast, to drop you a few lines which might chance to be of interest to some of your numerous readers, especially the youthful portion of them, who have seen, as yet, only a very small portion of this "ball on which we live," I now venture for the first time, to take my pen in hand, for the purpose of jotting down a few thoughts for publication in your valuable paper. For the sake of brevity, the great essential, I believe, in communications for the press, I may be allowed to pass over any attempted description of the beautiful country through which I passed, both in Canada and the United States, until I reached Chicago, the great commercial capital of these western states on the lakes, where such an immense shipping is carried on in wheat, corn, pork, &c. From this place, proceeding by way of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R., I had the pleasure of passing over the indeed. An employee on the railway informed me that this is the fourth season in which the "hoppers" have devastated this part of the country, and consequently ruin to the farmer is the inevitable result. The ground, fences, and buildings were in many places almost black with them. I have no doubt the suffering of the inhabitants will be very great on account of these pests. At the distance of three or four hundred miles from the Missouri we begin to feel the air getting cooler. We are gradually passing into a higher altitude up the slope of the Rocky Mountains, "the back bone of America" as the children sometimes call them. Here the antelopes are seen feeding on the grass (everywhere growing on the eastern slope) singly, in twos and threes, and occasionally in droves. Rabbits occasionally start up, not from their hiding places, as they have none, and prairie dogs are seen in abundance.—This is

A VAST TREELESS WASTE.

For hundreds of miles not a tree or bush is to be seen. We find ourselves passing perceptibly into a cooler atmosphere, until upon reaching the summit at Sherman, 8240 feet above the level of the sea, we are not displeased at having a fire lighted in the stove, and upon going out upon the platform, we instinctively button up to the chin on this warm (?) sun-shining summer's day to keep out the blasts from the lofty peaks of the mountains. Passing Cheyenne, a nice town of about 4000 inhabitants, in which are some very fine buildings we begin to descend gradually the western slope. Here among the mountain solitudes, we pass the "thousand mile tree," a solitary tree of medium size standing close to the track and just 1000 miles from Omaha. Every eye is on the alert to get a glimpse at this tree as we are rapidly speeding our way onwards. But I must stop or I shall fail to get an insertion.—More anon.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, Oct. 9th, 1876.

The Council met at 7:30 p. m., the Mayor in the chair. Present, all the members, except Mr. Miller.

The minutes of the previous meetings

THE AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITION.—Hon. James Skeed and Mr. J. M. Currier, M. P., have decided to send a consignment of sawn and manufactured lumber to the exhibition at Sidney, Australia, next April.

MINING.—We understand that Mr. Crevaling, the managing director of the Glendower company, has opened an iron mine on the farm of Mr. Morris, near Delta. Some thirty men will be employed. The ore will be shipped by way of the Rideau Canal to Kingston. —Whig.

DUNKIN IN QUEBEC.—The County of Missisquoi, in the Province of Québec, having adopted a County Dunkin by-law by a good majority, an appeal was made against its legality, on the ground that, since confederation the Act had been repealed by the Municipal Code of the Province. The judges have decided that the Temperance Act is still in force, and other counties will move at once for by-laws.

We would advise our friends to be careful how they take along a gin bottle as a travelling companion. A Mr. Harris, of Stanbridge, a few days ago, was driving towards home, when the king-bolt of the waggon came out and precipitated him to the ground. A gin bottle in his pocket broke, and a piece of the broken glass severed an artery in his side, causing almost instant death. —Sherbrooke News.

A NEW GOVERNOR.—A despatch from Ottawa intimates that Hon. David Laird has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Territory of Keewatin. His acceptance of the position will leave a vacancy in the Cabinet and in the representation of Queen's, P. E. I., in the House of Commons. Mr. Laird will make a good administrator, having made the affairs of the Northwest a careful study.

AN OLD ORANGEMAN.—The Kingston News of the 6th inst., contains the following notice of an old Orangeman: "We frequently see notices in our contemporaries of old Orangemen, and not long ago we referred to Mr. John Lewis, of this city, as one of the oldest in the country. We learn that Captain William Stewart, of Belleville, also claims the distinction of being a veteran in the cause. He was made an Orangeman

From this place, proceeding by way of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R., I had the pleasure of passing over the beautiful which my young friends would be so much delighted to see, with their waving cornfields extending for miles and miles on each side of the track. In order to give them some faint idea of the extent of these cornfields, I may state, that they continue for hundreds of miles from east to west, and, I have no doubt, an equal distance from north to south. They are the principal sources for wealth to the farmers in all this vast country. They are not obliged as in Ontario, to choose this field for corn or potatoes, that for wheat, and another for barley, etc., on account of the special adaptation of the soil to the various productions, but wherever the soil is brought into cultivation, the corn is planted, or the wheat is sown, with apparently a certain prospect of being amply rewarded for the labor expended, by way of a beautiful harvest. As you approach the Mississippi river, however, these level tracts give place to a more rolling country, with an occasional ravine, which is thickly wooded with trees of various kinds, while on the uplands, forests of oaks, are seen to stretch for many miles across the country.

CROSSING THE MISSISSIPPI

at Burlington about sundown we take to our couch (?) and find ourselves in the morning approaching the "muddy Missouri," over which at a slow rate, on a bridge constructed on iron tubes for piers, which are sunk to the depth of eighty two feet below low water mark, we cross over to Omaha in Nebraska, 502 miles from Chicago. These tubular piers reach upwards, I should judge, some 125 feet above the water

Monday, Oct. 9th, 1876.

The Council met at 7:30 p. m., the Mayor in the chair. Present, all the members, except Mr. Miller.

The minutes of the previous meetings were read and approved.

PETITIONS

From Kitty McCormic, asking aid. On motion of Mr. Wilson, seconded by Mr. Huffman, $1 a week was granted her for three months.

From Wm. Ross, James Belch and others, asking that a lamp be placed between the residence of Mr. Ross and the railway bridge.

SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

From Reeve & Morden, notifying the Council that they had been instructed by Mrs. Wm. Dryden to take legal proceedings against the Town, for injuries received on plank walk on John Street, unless an amicable arrangement could be come to between them. Referred to Street Committee to report.

A SETTLED CLAIM.

A bill was received from John D. Ronald, for a branch pipe and nozzle bought some time since for use of fire company. The account was, however, settled a long time ago and was referred to the Finance Committee with power to act.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Finance Committee reported, recommending payment of the following accounts referred to them. —R. Clark, $3 for fixing platform scales in weigh house; $35 to Dyer Howard for 35 nights service as night watchman; $1 to Charles Dunbar for fixing scales and

We learn that Captain William Stewart, of Belleville, also claims the distinction of being a veteran in the cause. He was made an Orangeman at Kilmore, Ireland, in the year 1813, and is therefore sixty-three years a member of the Order. The venerable gentleman took an active part as an officer at the battle of the Windmill. He is now eighty-five years old and is enjoying comparatively good health.

THE DOMINION GRANGE.—At the meeting of the Dominion Grange, Thursday, the election of officers for 1877 was made as follows:—Master, S. W. Hill, Ridgeville; Overseer, S. White, Charing Cross; Lecturer, E. J. Hilborne, Uxbridge; Steward, L. R. Whitman, Knowlton, Quebec; Assistant Steward, C. McGibben, Douglas, N.B.; Chaplain, J. Manning, Schomberg; Treasurer, J. P. The committee on suggestions for the good of the order than presented their report which was adopted. It recommended that millers be not eligible as members; that the executive committee be empowered to procure essays on chemistry and entomology and other subjects of practical importance to farmers, such essays to be printed and distributed among the Grangers; that an hour at each meeting of subordinate Granges be set apart for social and intellectual improvement, and that the executive committee take steps to obtain the opinion of subordinate Granges as to the advisability of establishing an institution for the higher education of farmer's daughters, where the practical duties of the household, and dairy, as well as the ordinary branches of education, could be taught, and a practical knowledge of horticulture and floriculture acquired.

of miles from east to west, and, I have no doubt, an equal distance from north to south. They are the principal sources for wealth to the farmers in all this vast country. They are not obliged as in Ontario, to choose this field for corn or potatoes, that for wheat, and another for barley, etc., on account of the special adaptation of the soil to the various productions, but wherever the soil is brought into cultivation, the corn is planted, or the wheat is sown, with apparently a certain prospect of being amply rewarded for the labor expended, by way of a beautiful harvest. As you approach the Mississippi river, however, the level tracts give place to a more rolling country, with an occasional ravine, which is thickly wooded with trees of various kinds, while on the uplands, forests of oaks, are seen to stretch for many miles across the country.

at Burlington about sundown we take to our couch (?) and find ourselves in the morning approaching the "muddy Missouri," over which at a slow rate, on a bridge constructed on iron tubes for piers, which are sunk to the depth of eighty two feet below low water mark, we cross over to Omaha in Nebraska, 502 miles from Chicago. These tubular piers reach upwards, I should judge, some 125 feet above the water, making a total length of over 200 feet. I am not prepared to give the exact length of this bridge, but do not think I would be wide the mark in stating that probably it is upwards of a mile in length. By way of digression I may state that here the Chinamen, with their long cue hanging behind, made their first appearance. The hair is closely shaven off, with the exceptions of a small portion on the back part of their heads. The hair of this part is nicely braided into one braid, mixed in with silk threads and reaches often times within a few inches of the ground. They take great pride in this caudal appendage, and in their eyes no greater punishment can be inflicted upon them, death itself excepted, by the "powers that be" in case of crime having been committed by them, than by sentencing them to pass through the tonsorial process, as they look upon it as a most abject and utter disgrace to be deprived of the unseparable cue.—Passing

WESTWARD FROM OMAHA

about 100 miles, there we met the eastward march of that terrible plague, grasshoppers. At first their ravages did not seem so serious, but as we continued westward we found, that, although they did not darken the air, 'hide the sun from view' and hinder the progress of the train, as they are sometimes said to do, they were making sad work of it. They first trim off the leaves from the fields of corn, then the husks, and finally extract the very juice from the kernel itself, leaving nothing for the husbandman but the bare stalks, standing like naked bean poles. This was actually the case for many miles, and if they continue their march eastward the result will be dire

SUIT FOR DAMAGES.

From Reeve & Morden, notifying the Council that they had been instructed by Mrs. Wm. Dryden to take legal proceedings against the Town, for injuries received on plank walk on John Street, unless an amicable arrangement could be come to between them. Referred to Street Committee to report.

A SETTLED CLAIM.

A bill was received from John D. Ronald, for a branch pipe and nozzle bought some time since for use of fire company. The account was, however, settled a long time ago and was referred to the Finance Committee with power to act.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Finance Committee reported, recommending payment of the following accounts referred to them.—R. Clark, $3 for fixing platform scales in weigh house; $35 to Dyer Howard for 35 nights service as night watchman; $1 to Charles Dunbar for fixing scales and weights; $3.50 to G. B. Sills, Inspector of Weights and Measures. In the matter of the Collectors Bonds they could find none prior to 1875.

Mr. Gibson moved, seconded by Mr. Wilson, that the Treasurer be instructed to make a search for the missing bonds, and produce them, if possible, at next meeting.—Carried.

THE STREET LAMPS.

Dr. Ruttan, Chairman of the Street Committee, reported they had taken into consideration the information furnished by the Special Committee to whom was referred the question of lighting the streets, as to the cost of lamp post, &c.

The report was taken up and considered in Committee of the Whole. Mr. Geddes in the chair, and the following clauses passed:—

That the tender of Mr. Angus McLeod to furnish the lamp posts, and globe lamps, with everything completed, for $19 a piece, be accepted,

The Company agree to keep the lamps lighted at all times, except during day light and moon-light nights for $15 per annum.

This clause was passed by inserting providing the Gas Company furnish the gas at the foot of the gas posts free of charge.

A recommendation having been made in the report that from 25 to 30 lamps be put up, the placing of which was to be in the hands of the Committee, a lengthy discussion took place, and was the reason assigned for another week's delay, and reference again to the Committee.

The petition of Wm. Ross and others for a gas lamp, was, on motion filed.

Some accounts were ordered paid and the Council adjourned.

Literature,

The Book-Keeper's Robber.

Scattered through all the mining countries of California, perched upon the sides of mountains, or hidden in deep gulches, are the quartz mills, by means of which gold is extricated from the worthless rock that confines it. There are hundreds upon hundreds of them all over the State, some in active operation, the majority silent and deserted. You can easily tell when one is being worked. The roar of the ponderous stamps may be heard at a great distance, and in the mills themselves you can hardly hear your own voice.

Once in every week or ten days the mill is stopped. This is done for the purpose of "cleaning up," as it is called, that is, of gathering from the batteries and sluices, from the pans and amalgamators, the amalgam from which, after it has passed through the retorts, the bright gold bullion is obtained. Every one living in the immediate neighborhood of a mill knows when it is cleaning-up day. The silence proclaims it, and even if one wished, there could be no method of concealing it.

A few years ago I was employed in a mine in Nevada County as book-keeper. I was then a youngster of seventeen. I had taken a voyage to San Francisco before the mast, under the mistaken idea that I was born a sailor. Now I was working my way as best I could, in order to get a living.

The fall and winter of that year will long be remembered in that country. Light figured gentry, commonly known as foot-pads, were more than usually plenty. Stages were stopped. The treasure-boxes were rifled. Passengers were relieved of their purses, watches and jewelry. Two cripples, who kept a toll-gate, were found murdered, their safe opened and money gone. Travellers were stopped on the road, and quiet pedestrians, returning to their homes late at night, were called upon to stand and deliver.

No wonder, then, that people hesitated about travelling after sundown, especially if they had anything of value on their persons.

It was late in the month of October. The mills had been running for two weeks, night and day, on a higher grade.

I was nearly half way to town. A few rods more and I should be in a more open part of the country, and I shook the reins and gave my horse a touch of the spur. At almost the same moment he passed a turn in the road, and there, not a rod before us, stood what seemed to be a man, with rifle in hand, pointed directly at me.

What followed took actually not a minute, but to me it seemed an hour. At the rate I was going it was impossible to turn back; it was equally impossible to stop; nothing was left but to go ahead. I put both spurs to my horse, and at the same moment drew my pistol, aimed as well as I could and fired.

The sharp stroke on his sides and the report maddened my horse, and the rest of the way I made faster time than I ever made before or have made since. Not a sound did I hear behind me, and in less than ten minutes I pulled up before the express office and rid myself of my load.

I did not have much appetite for supper that night. I went early to my room, not having said a word to anyone of my adventure, and there I sat until a late hour thinking it over.

If the man was not a robber, what was he doing there at that hour, standing in the road with a gun?

If I had not killed him, why had he not returned my shot? In my ignorance, I supposed that anyone who killed another was liable to imprisonment if not to death. If this man was not a robber, was not my life certainly forfeited? Even if he was, was I not liable to punishment for taking the law in my own hands?

These and fifty other like questions came crowding through my mind. I had no friends in town, no one to whom I could go for counsel or advice. I went to bed and tried to sleep, but it was of no use; I could only roll and toss and think, and I can safely say that that night was one of the most miserable I ever spent.

Toward morning I fell into a restless sleep, from which I started every now and then as the terror of that moment crossed my mind; and so the long hours passed away and daylight came.

I had now determined what to do. I would go to the stable and get my horse, and ride out to the place and examine the ground. If I found th sharp speeches, soon secured Stephen. Sober Sarah saw several superior senior sons, so he sternly silenced Susan's sentiment.

"Sister," she said; so Stephen Sander's silly speeches still seems sweet. Shall Simon Strong's superior station stand scorned? Shall Susan Smith so stoop?

Susan stamped. "Simon Strong shall soon see!" she said. So seizing Sarah's striped stocking, she set several stitches. Scarcely seventeen Susan—small, slender, simple. Seven scorned suitors stood sullenly seeing Stephen Sander's supremacy. Stephen serenely smiled superior, sending sincere sympathy:

Several signs showed Sarah Susan's sentiments: sometimes she sighed; sometimes sobbed, sometimes scolded, still Susan saw Stephen Sanders. She seemed sad, sullen, sulky.

Suddenly, smelling smoke, she saw Stephen standing smoking some seventy steps south. Sarah seemed sleepy, so Susan signalled Stephen—"silence!" Soon Sarah snored. Susan stepped silently southward.

"Say, sweet sylph," said smiling Stephen, "shall sweet strolls, soft speeches, sparkling satire seem silly?"

"So sister Sarah says," Susan sobbed; "she sends Simon Strong seeking Stephen's Susan."

Stephen swore softly.

"So stern Sally seeks shoemaker's society! Stephen Sanders shall surely save sweet Susan."

She still sobbed, seeming sincerely sad, supremely sorrowful. Suddenly Stephen said, smiling:

"Shall Simon Strong seek sweet Susan's side? Shall Stephen Sanders survive such subtlety. Say, Susan, shall Sanders speedily supplant Smith? Shall Susan sign some softer surname! speak!"

She sighed. "Susan Sanders shall surely supplant Susan Smith," she said.

So, stern, Sarah!

Soon Stephen Sanders, Susan Smith, safely spliced, sought Sarah. "Stern sister," said Stephen; "Speak softly, scattered smiles, scorn scolding."

Sarah scowled savagely; soon, seeing superior sense, she sobbed slightly, smiled sweetly, saluted Susan.

gone. Travellers were stopped on the road, and quiet pedestrians, returning to their homes late at night, were called upon to stand and deliver.

No wonder, then, that people hesitated about travelling after sundown, especially if they had anything of value on their persons.

It was late in the month of October. The mills had been running for two weeks, night and day, on a higher grade of ore than the average. One day, as the superintendent left the office, he gave orders that the mill should be stopped before daylight, and the work of cleaning up be begun immediately, so that it might be finished if possible before dark.

Accordingly, as soon as the first rays of light showed in the east, the engine was slowed down, the thump, thump of the stamps grew slower, until they ceased altogether, and the work began.

But when the superintendent arrived at ten o'clock, the batteries were not half cleaned. At noon an hour was lost while the hands were at dinner; and in the afternoon the foreman of the mill was busy at the furnace, retorting the amalgam that had accumulated during the week from the coppers before the batteries. Work as fast as they could, it was after five before all was ready for the great retort.

When we had seen the retort put into the furnace, the superintendent called me into the office and said:

"I've got to go to town now to attend to some business, but that bullion must come in to-night to go down on to-morrow's stage, and you must bring it. When it's ready, put it into the big bullion pack, and strap it on the pommel of your saddle; take your revolver, and when you start, ride like fun, and look out for foot-pads."

It was seven o'clock and nearly dark before the bullion was ready to be placed in the heavy leather sack. My horse, already saddled, stood at the door, and, following instructions, I strapped the sack to one pommel of the saddle, and, having loaded my revolver, I put foot in the stirrup and mounted. Morton, the foreman, shouted, "Good luck!" and away I went.

The road was a long and lonely one. There were no houses upon it. Clumps of trees were numerous and thick patches of manzanita bushes, which I had often thought would give ample shelter to robbers, even in the daytime.

As I have before stated, I was not very old, and had been but a short that that night was one of the most miserable I ever spent.

Toward morning I fell into a restless sleep, from which I started every now and then as the terror of that moment crossed my mind; and so the long hours passed away and daylight came.

I had now determined what to do. I would go to the stable and get my horse, and ride out to the place and examine the ground. If I found the man, possibly I might know who he was; if a stranger, I could be more certain that he was there with an evil purpose. At any rate, I could satisfy myself whether the shot had been fatal or not. If it had been fatal, then I would return to town, go to the Sheriff of the County, tell him all about it, and give myself up; that seemed the right and best thing to do.

No one was stirring as I led out my horse and mounted him. The sun had not yet risen, and I remember feeling glad that it had not. I did not see how it could be wrong for me to defend that which had been put in my charge, and yet as I rode out of town I felt as weighed down in spirits as it seemed possible for a really guilty man to feel.

As I neared the fatal spot, I reined my horse to a walk. I did not know more I should know if the stain of blood was on my hands. I dreaded to turn the corner, dreaded to see the still form that I fully expected to find lying in the road, but at length I gave the horse the word and passed around the corner.

Yes, there was the spot, but the road was clear before me; that was a great relief. The next moment I raised my eyes, and a peal of laughter rang from my lips that might have been heard for half a mile around.

There by the roadside stood the stump of an old tree with one lifeless limb stretched out and pointing down the road. There indeed was my robber, the victim of my maiden shot that had caused me so much misery for the past ten hours. It was some comfort in the midst of my laugh against myself to find that my aim was good, for there in the tree was the fresh mark of my bullet.

That I rode back to town with a light heart, I need hardly say, neither need I say that I tried to keep this adventure to myself; but at last it leaked out, and the story of the book-keeper's robber became as well known in that region as it is now to you.

A WHOPPER.

The following is from one of our exchanges published "Out West," and smacks somewhat, we fancy, of western extravagance. We fear the editor has been misled about the truth of the facts:

A Pennsylvania editor knows a man who had always had the idea that he could invent a self-acting sewing machine, and he did. He produced a steel ribbon-spring about twenty feet long, and of sufficient power to run a horse-car. This he rigged on his wife's sewing machine with a lot of clock work, and it appeared to him, when he finished the job that evening, that he had realized his hopes. If any sewing machine ever would go, that would; so he wound it up ready for use in the morning and went to bed. At four o'clock Mrs. Kipp roused him and told him to listen to the burglars in the house. He listened and heard a most terrific racket over in the sitting room. It appeared to him that there must be a million or more burglars refreshing themselves with a prize fight. So he loaded his gun, crept softly over, and peeped through a crack in the door. It was not burglars; it was Mrs. Kipp's sewing machine. The peg had slipped, and that spring had full play. It would rear the machine up on one end, and charge it three or four times, like a battering-ram against the glass front of the book-case. Then it would wheel around and suddenly across the room and but furiously against the mantle-piece; and it would lie down and roll over on the floor, and hammer at the sofa, and boost the centre-table, and try to jam a hole through the wall, and endeavor to leap up on the chandelier. And as Kipp entered the room it flew at him, and tore in and out between his legs, the wheels revolving like tury all the time, and the spring gradually unwinding. And then Kipp retreated and waked up the family, and got the mattress of the bed. Then they covered the machine and sat on it for a while and finally pushed it out of the window into the yard, where Kipp piled boxes

As I have before stated, I was not very old, and had been but a short time from my quiet Eastern home, where robberies on the road were sometimes read about, but rarely experienced. I don't think I was more of a coward than most boys of my age, but I could not drive from my mind all that I had heard of robberies and murders during the past months. I did have a firm intention of sticking to the bullion under my charge, but I most sincerely hoped that I should not be called upon to give it up.

My horse traveled famously. It grew darker and darker. I could hardly see the road, but he kept it as though confined by fences on either side. He was going to his stable, and was impatient for the hay and grain that he knew was waiting for him there.

SUSAN SMITH.

BY JOSIE FLETCHER.

Sad, silent, sorrowful, sat Sarah Smith, silent stitching sister Susan's summer sacque. She sighed, stitched steadily several seconds, smiling sadly. Suddenly, sister Susan, suppressing several silly simpers, spoke:

"Sarah," she said softly, "Stephen Sanders says sentiment seems specially sensible since September."

Sarah started. Seven seasons scarcely seemed six, since Stephen Sanders, seeking strawberries saw Susan similarly situated. Several successive Sundays Stephen sought Sarah's sister. Susan's sylph-like shape, small stature,

But all night, under the heap, it kept up a continual buzz and snort and hum, so that the next-door neighbor fired at it sixteen times with the impression that it was cats. Kipp has since bought a new machine, and his wife runs it with her feet. He has abandoned the study of mechanics for the present.

LACE INDUSTRIES OF EUROPE.

From the fourteenth century the art of lacemaking continued to increase and spread in all the countries of Europe. It would be impossible to enumerate all the different points that are spoken of in the histories of lace that have

from time to time been written, or that occur in the inventories and wardrobe accounts of kings and queens, priests and perlates, in those five centuries. Every country of Europe—nay, every section of the various countries—has had its particular point. This is measurably the case at the present day. The lace industries of Europe form no small item in the revenues of those nations. In spite of the inventions in the way of machineries that weave imitations of every old or new point, thousands of women and childree earn their livelihood by the manufacture of needle or pillow lace (handmade), working mostly in their own cottages, in the open air, or at the windows, on the flowers or designs which are generally given out to them from the central manufactory, where the designing is done, and where are generally given out to them from the central manufactory, where the designing is done, and where the whole is put together by "bride" or "reseau" workers after the outside flower-workers have finished their part of the work. It is estimated that there are 500,000 lace-workers, mostly women and children, in Europe, of whom nearly one-half are employed in France. Almost all of these lace-workers perform their labor at their own homes. In Belgium, where there are 900 lace schools, many of which are in convents, there are no less than 150,000 women engaged in lace-making. In Auvergne, in France, there are 130,000 thus employed, most of whom work in their homes in the environs of Le Puy, which was one of the earliest centres of this industry, and where it still continues to flourish.

England produces a large quantity of pillow lace. Very beautiful specimens of the laces of Bedford, Wiltshire, Dorset, Northampton, Buckinghamshire, and Devonshire are given in Madame Palisser's History of Lace; but the principal lace-producing town of England is Honiton, in Devonshire. Honiton is the best known of the English lace on this side of the Atlantic. This was brought into modern notice and made fashionable by Queen Victoria, who, commiserating the condition of the lace-workers of Devonshire, and wishing to bring their work into demand, ordered her wedding-dress of it. Her two daughters and the Princess of Wales following her example, by ordering their wedding-dresses also of Honiton, have made it a fashionable expensive lace ever since.—Harper's Magazine.

The blame, we suspect, rests with the retail dealers, who exercise a precious monopoly. For some time past we have witnessed an increasing importation both of 'live' and 'dressed' beef to this country. Constant shipments of cattle are being made from Galveston, Chicago, New York and other ports, averaging from one hundred to four hundred head per week. More than this, a new branch of enterprise has been commenced in the 'Commercial Metropolis' of the United States, Mr. Eastman, of the Produce Exchange, having introduced the same. In future, the Cunard steamers are to carry fresh meat as cargo; iron compartments, each containing an air-exhausting apparatus, being fitted up for this purpose. The 'Abyssinia,' which left New York on the 9th inst., had on board the carcasses of one hundred and thirty head of cattle. It is an anomaly therefore, that butchers' meat should be so dear, both in London and the provinces.—Intelligence.

iton is the best known of the English lace on this side of the Atlantic. This was brought into modern notice and made fashionable by Queen Victoria, who, commiserating the condition of the lace-workers of Devonshire, and wishing to bring their work into demand, ordered her wedding-dress of it. Her two daughters and the Princess of Wales following her example, by ordering their wedding-dresses also of Honiton, have made it a fashionable expensive lace ever since.—Harper's Magazine.

TYPE IN A NEWSPAPER.

The Poughkeepsie Esayle, in an article on "Mistakes in the Newspapers," says the number of type used in a paper the size of the Eagle is 600,000, the actual number of bits of metal arranged and re-arranged every day in preparing a newspaper the size of the Eagle for the press. We suppose few people think of the printing trade as the most exact and particular business, but it is. In making type, variations that might be allowed in the machinery of the finest watch would render the type useless. It is very rarely that type furnished by two separate foundries can be used together without a good deal of trouble, though they try to make it after the same standard. We read once in a while of a wonderful piece of cabinet work or mosaic work containing ten, twenty or fifty thousand pieces, the maker of which has spent months or even years of labor in producing it, and people go to see it as a great curiosity; but the most elaborate and careful fitted piece of work of this kind ever made does not compare with that the printer does every day. The man who does the first is looked upon as an artist—a marvel of skill, and if a hundred of his pieces are put in wrong side up, or turned the wrong way, it is not observed in the general effect; but if the printer, in fitting ten times as many pieces together in the same day put one where another should be, or turns one the wrong way, everybody sees it and is amazed at "the stupid carelessness of those stupid printers."

BEEF IN ENGLAND.

During the first six months in 1876 England imported beef to the value of half a million sterling more than during the corresponding six months of 1875. This shows a large increase in the trade, but that the demand is keeping pace with the supply seems to be proved by the fact that the price of butcher's meat has not come down in England. The London Echo laments its dearness, saying that “the exorbitant price is a matter of serious concern to the masses of this great city. It must more or less injuriously affect their health, strength, and comfort, and, consequently their capacity for work. Many thousand families are now debarred from the daily use of fresh animal food, inasmuch as they cannot afford the outlay which the purchase thereof would entail. The question arises—does any legitimate cause exist why meat should be practically placed beyond the reach of the people? We are inclined to answer in the negative.

MRS. YOUMANS ON PROHIBITION.

The following is a good report of an able address by Mrs. Youmans, of Picton, given at a mass temperance meeting at St. Marys last week. The report is copied from the London Advertiser:—Mrs. Yeomans was the next speaker. She announced herself as speaking on behalf of the women and children of Canada, pleading for protection. She preferred the term "protection" to "prohibition," as more accurately describing what is needed. The question of the liquor traffic she considered the problem of the 19th century. Each century has had its problems. They have been solved, and she was confident the time is near at hand when a banner bearing the inscription of "temperance" will wave over all our homes. Her heart had been stirred to its utmost depths in looking at the liquor question from the standpoint of the Bible and of desolated homes. The Bible, is opposed to all that is wrong—the injunction is "Thou shalt not?" and there is no compromise whatever. Heaven's prohibitory law is "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink," and it would read as well as if it were "Woe to her that giveth her neighbor drink!" Many a man who will not enter a bar-room has not the moral courage to refuse drink when it is offered to him by a woman. Recently she had talked with a drunkard, who said he believed his mother had made him so, having flavored his food with brandy when he was young. How bitter must be the thoughts of that woman who stands at the grave of her son to know that she had helped to dig the grave! There are, as Mr. Gough says, two class of drunkards—those who could give up drink if they would, and those who would give it up if they could! She reproached the use of alcohol in all cases, and she considered it little less than sacrilege take liquor at the communion table and call it the blood of Christ. (Applause.) She begged all who loved the Lord to do away with the keeping of drink in their house, and told an affecting story of a person who was a church member but still kept liquor, and from the example set, his six sons confirmed drunkards. She next attacked the licensed principle on the ground that it is forbidden in the Scripture. She liked, she said, the illustration of Mr. Knowlton of the thirty witnesses can obtain admittance. (Loud applause.) The various improvements since the passage of the Act were adverted to, and an earnest appeal made for the people of Perth to raise up and pass the Bill, the lady taking her seat amidst loud applause.

It was then moved by Mr. Jones (for Dr. Sinclair), and seconded by Mr. G. S. Climie, that it is the opinion of this meeting that the time has arrived for the passage of the Dunkin Bill in the county of Perth, and that it pledges itself to the support of such measure as soon as brought forward for the votes of the people.

ZACCHEUS.

Pardon me, if I draw a little on my imagination. Bartimeus gets into Jericho, and he says, "I will go and see my wife, and tell her about it." A young convert always wants to talk to his friends about salvation. Away he goes down the street, and he meets a man who passes him, goes on a few yards, and then turns round and says, "Bartimeus, is that you?" "Yes." "Well I thought it was, but I could not believe my eyes. How have you got your sight?" "Oh, I just met Jesus of Nazareth outside of the city, and asked Him to have mercy on me." Jesus of Nazareth! What, is He in this part of the country?" "Yes. He is right here in Jericho. He is now going down to the western gate." "I should like to see Him," says the man, and away he runs down the street; but he cannot catch a glimpse of Him, even though he stands on tiptoe, being little of stature, and on account of the great throng around Him. "Well," he says, "I am not going to be disappointed;" so he runs on, and climbs up into a sycamore tree. "If I can get on to that branch, hanging right over the highway, He cannot pass without my getting a good look at Him." That must have been a very strange sight to see the rich man climbing up a tree like a boy, and hiding among the leaves, where he thought nobody would see him, to get a glimpse of the passing stranger! There is the crowd bursting out, and he looks for Jesus. He looks at Peter; "That's not Him." He looks at John; "That's not Him." At last his eyes rested on One fairer than the son of men; "That's Him!" And Zaccheus, just peeping out from among the branches, looks down upon the God grave ! There are, as Mr. Gough says, two class of drunkards—those who could give up drink if they would, and those who would give it up if they could ! She reprobated the use of alcohol in all cases, and she considered it little less than sacrilege take liquor at the communion table and call it the blood of Christ. (Applause.) She begged all who loved the Lord to do away with the keeping of drink in their house, and told an affecting story of a person who was a church member but still kept liquor, and from the example set, his six sons confirmed drunkards. She next attacked the licensed principle on the ground that it is forbidden in the Scripture. She liked, she said, the illustration of Mr. Knowlton of the thirty pieces of silver. What was done with the money? They took it to buy a Pot-tes' Field, and called that the Field of Blood. But all the taxes paid for the sale of liquor in Canada would not be sufficient to buy a field to bury the drunkards in. The women of Rome once contributed their jewels to save the city, but the women of Canada have been contributing to pay the revenue much more precious jewels—they have been giving their boys, who have been made drunkards. She be- lieved there is jewellery enough to pay the revenue for one year, and if there is not let us take in sewing to do it—let us go out washing—let us do anything, but save our boys. Mrs. Yeomans told of a number of affecting incidents which had occurred in the county of Grey during the agitation for the pass- age of the Dunkin Act, and drew a tearful picture of the career of the Youngs, who had received their school- ing in a tavern. She also told of her visit to the Central Prison, where she was informed by an official that two- thirds of the prisoners were brought in by drink. She had taught a class of eight young men there one Sunday, seven of whom acknowledged that drink and nothing else had caused their imprisonment. The liquor traffic is drawing scholars from the Sunday School, drawing children from their homes, filling our prisons—and all by special Act of Parliament ! It is a shame and disgrace to take a revenue from such a source. Even the dark ages are raising up to condemn us. We remember the Chinese emperor who re- fused to permit the introduction of opium on the ground that he would not receive money from what debased his subjects. "Noble old heathen !— I'd like to see him in the Dominion Par- liament !" (Applause and laughter.) It

At last the crowd comes to the tree; it looks as if Christ were going by; but he stops right under the tree; looks up, and says, "Zaccheus, make haste and come down." I can imagine the first thought in his mind was, "Who told Him my name? I was never introduced to Him." Ah! He knew him. Sinner, Christ knows all about you. He knows your name and your house. You need not try to hide from him. He knows where you are, and all about you.—D. L. Moody.

DEAD TO THE WORLD.

The New York correspondent of the Boston Gazette has this :
This city is teeming with romance and tragedy, if one only knew just where to look for it. I was walking up Four- teenth street, yesterday, with a lady, and as we passed an elegant brown stone house, surrounded by a large garden, between Fifth and Sixth av- enues, she said : "Do you see that house?" "Yes," said I, "and I have often noticed it, and thought what fun it would be to live in such a place." The people who live there don't find it such fun," she replied, and continued, "in the back bedrooms of that house lives a lady who has not seen the light of day for years." "Poor thing," said I, "is she stone blind?" "No ; she is not blind at all, but sees as well as I can," and she turned a pair of the brightest brown eyes in the world up to mine. "Explain yourself, pray," said I, "what is the mystery?" "There is no mystery—only the lady I speak of, who is still a young woman, lost her only child some years and before she had recovered from the shock her husband died. Since that time she has not left those rooms—the shutters are closed and the gas is (Renewed applause.) She blamed the government, but the government is not that at Ottawa or at Toronto—the government is the free and independent electors. She urged the people of Perth to stand up at the polls against the legalized schools of vice. At the great temperance meeting at the Centennial it was admitted that Canada stood the fairest chance for prohibition, and now is the time to strike for glory. Mrs. Yeomans next spoke of the passage of the Dunkin Act in Prince Edward, and how the hotel-keepers, who closed up during the Assizes in order to incommode the visitors, had been outwitted by the temperance people throwing open their houses. The dealers were trying all they could to overthrow the law, expressing their determination to carry the matter to the highest courts—even to the Supreme Court of Heaven itself. Here, however, we are not afraid of them, for none of their

DEAD TO THE WORLD.

The New York correspondent of the Boston Gazette has this:

This city is teeming with romance and tragedy, if one only knew just where to look for it. I was walking up Fourteenth street, yesterday, with a lady, and as we passed an elegant brown stone house, surrounded by a large garden, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, she said: "Do you see that house?" "Yes," said I, "and I have often noticed it, and thought what fun it would be to live in such a place." The people who live there don't find it such fun," she replied, and continued, "in the back bedrooms of that house lives a lady who has not seen the light of day for years." "Poor thing," said I, "is she stone blind?" "No; she is not blind at all, but sees as well as I can," and she turned a pair of the brightest brown eyes in the world up to mine. "Explain yourself, pray," said I, "what is the mystery?" "There is no mystery—only the lady I speak of, who is still a young woman, lost her only child some years and before she had recovered from the shock her husband died. Since that time she has not left those rooms—the shutters are close and the gas is kept burning, just as on the night of her husband's death, so that she may make no note of time; and there she sits, waiting patiently for the voice that shall call her to that country where there is no night." "What a very sad story," said I, as I looked back over my shoulder at the house, which seemed to gather the shadows as they passed; "it is a Miss Haversham case in real life." "The only difference," said my friend, "being that this lady's mind is as clear as the noonday sun. She is only dead to the world because her world is dead."

American silver has taken another tumble in the Canadian market. Half dollars are now taken for 40c., and quarter dollars for 20c. This is their market value here, and we would strongly urge all who intend going to the Centennial to take American silver with them to be used in the way of small change.

We shall be glad to show our Stoves to all who wish to be for their interest.

Quite a number of the subscribers of the "Express" have been regularly supplied with the paper throughout the year without having yet paid their subscriptions. A NEW ORGAN.

The Licensed Victuallers Association of Ontario have resolved to publish a newspaper, in Toronto, as an organ, to vindicate the interests of the liquor sellers and liquor manufacturers. The prospectus of the new journal—"The World"—has been issued, and it sets forth its design. The prospectus claims that by the workings of the new License Act 1,500 persons have been thrown out of employment, because, we suppose, of the decreased number of places where liquors are sold, and a decreased consumption. Whatever alarm this may create among those directly engaged in the traffic, it will not be considered an unhealthy indication by the general public. The general agitation in favour of Dunkin by-laws, in the different counties, is a strong reason given why there should be a general "rouse to vindicate the just rights" of the trade. The new paper is to be under the editorial control of the noted E. King Dodds, who has distinguished himself during the past few months as a travelling champion of the Conservative party, in company with Sir John A McDonald, Boulton, and other famous champions of the Opposition. Under the circumstances every one would expect to read in the prospectus the announcement that is made that "the editorial tone of the paper will be they need cultivation, and ornamentation. Could not our children be amused as well as instructed, if got to assist in tree-planting, and in the cultivation of shrubs and flowers about the grounds?

THE KINGSTON ROLLING MILLS.

A meeting was held in Kingston on Wednesday evening of last week to consider the establishment of ironrolling mills in that city. In regard to the opening for such a branch to industry the chairman, Dr. Evans, stated the following facts:—

"Scrap in Kingston costs $14 per ton, freight to Oswego $1, duty $0.20, equals $22.20 delivered in Oswego; freight thence to Syracuse, where it is manufactured into bar $1.50, freight back to Kingston $2.50, duty $2, expense of manufacture $11; making a total of $39.20, against $26.00 for its production on the spot. The market price of scrap iron is $15 per ton; manufactured into merchant bar it sells for $40. With an outlay of $50,000 for permanent works twelve tons can be manufactured on every working day of the year, thus producing an income of $50,000."

As it now is, the ore mined in the County of Frontenac is sent to the United States to smelt. It is claimed that it would be cheaper to bring the coal to the ore than to take the ore to the coal. In Kingston lime is abundant and of good quality, and wages low. It was therefore urged that a better plan would be to start with the erection of smelting works, to manufacture the raw ore into metal, rather than the manufacture of scrap iron. Doubts were expressed whether enough scrap iron can be procured to keep rolling mills at work in this Province. It was stated, however, that about 12,000 tons of scrap iron were expected last year, one third of which quantity would be enough.

The meeting adjourned without any definite action.

THE PROVINCIAL EXHIBITION.

The London Advertiser makes the sensible suggestion that the time of holding the Provincial Exhibitions should be extended to two weeks, instead of three or four days as at present. So far as the exhibition of the live stock is concerned there are strong reasons for allowing the time to remain as it now is, as farmers do not care to have their horses and cattle so long away from their farms, and on heavy expense, but in other respects there are many advantages from extension. There are a good many other indications that the Conservative party and the Liquor party are in perfect harmony.

PHYSICAL SPORTS AT SCHOOLS.

We are pleased to notice the additional attractions that have been made to our school grounds, at the suggestion, we believe, of Mr. Mathison, Head Teacher. During the last month swings, bars and other gymnastic apparatus have been fitted up, in a substantial manner, for both the boys and girls, and the children seem to be enjoying them immensely, during their play hours. It is a wonder that nothing of the kind had been previously provided. It is a freely admitted fact that children, while at school, need physical as well as mental culture. It is a pitiable sight—and it is by no means uncommon—to see some of our best educated young men and women quite broken down in health, simply because while they were cultivating the mind physical culture was entirely neglected. There is certainly, no need of this. Children delight to engage in good physical exercise, if encouraged in it, and it should be taught in our schools. The pupil who has not been taught in the necessity and advantage of physical development has, indeed, a defective education. This is especially true in reference to our girls. We should not have so many sickly women among the educated classes. The fact that the number is considerably greater among them than among the uneducated is a poor commentary on our educational system.

Besides the advantages of physical development it is well known that tons of scrap iron were expected last year, one third of which quantity would be enough.

The London Advertiser makes the sensible suggestion that the time of holding the Provincial Exhibitions should be extended to two weeks, instead of three or four days as at present. So far as the exhibition of the live stock is concerned there are strong reasons for allowing the time to remain as it now is, as farmers do not care to have their horses and cattle so long away from their farms, and on heavy expense, but in other respects there are many advantages from extension. In the first place the crowd would not be so great as it now is, and visitors could give a more leisurely inspection to the articles on exhibit. Then there would not be the same difficulty in procuring accommodation at the public houses, and by the trains in travelling, as only a part would go in one week. There would be a much better opportunity, also, to the exhibitors and manufacturers of making sales, and finding customers—an advantage which, no doubt, the manufacturers would so much appreciate as to induce a good many more to become exhibitors than now do, and would encourage them to go to more expense to put their machinery into operation on the grounds, and submit to other practical tests. All these things, would give a permanence, an importance, and a value to the yearly exhibitions which they do not now possess. Let us have the experimental trial for a year or so at least.

We are pleased to notice the additional attractions that have been made to our school grounds, at the suggestion, we believe, of Mr. Mathison, Head Teacher. We should not have so many sickly women among the educated classes. The fact that the number is considerably greater among them than among the uneducated is a poor commentary on our educational system.

Besides the advantages of physical development it is well known that these school sports, if provided, make our schools far more attractive for the children, and in consequence, there will be fewer truants to report. We believe it will be freely admitted, too, that the children are much better prepared for study after good physical exercise has been indulged in each day. Lassitude and dullness are dispelled, and the mind is in a better condition for application. It is a well established physiological fact that a healthy mind requires a healthy body, and both therefore need culture.

The teachers and scholars of the Napanee school have worked with a will, in the erection of their new gymnasium. The poles and lumber were supplied to them, and the rest they have done of themselves, and most cheerfully was it done. We make mention of these facts, hoping that other schools may follow the example, and enjoy the like advantages.

There are excellent grounds in connection with our school building, but users of making sales, and finding customers—an advantage which, no doubt, the manufacturers would so much appreciate as to induce a good many more to become exhibitors than now do, and would encourage them to go to more expense to put their machinery into operation on the grounds, and submit to other practical tests. Welland Canal. NOTICE.

CAPTAINS, Masters and Pilots of vessels entering or leaving the Welland Canal, via Port Colborne, are hereby informed that a Beacon is in course of construction at the outer end of the Shoal on the easterly side of the Harbour, at a place 530 feet east of the line of the range-lights which stand on the west pier, or within a short distance of where a large red buoy was moored.

The Beacon is octagonal in plan, and, when completed, will stand about 30 feet over the water surface. The respective sides will be painted red and white alternately, and a Ball, 3 feet in diameter, will be placed 6 feet over the top of the frame-work.

THE GAS WORKS.—The apparatus is now being put in the gas house, and in a week or so everything will begin to assume a good business shape. The house and works would well repay a visit.

If you want a tasty suit don't forget
 SPENCER'S.

M. E. CHURCH.—Special religious services are now being conducted in the M. E. Church in Napanee, and there are good indications of a religious revival. The congregations are already increasing. On Sunday next the Quarterly meeting will be held in the church, and the sacrament administered.

The latest style of goods and clothing, at
 SPENCER'S.

NO WONDER.—The London Advertiser intimates that the Police Court in that city is now being held in the old quarters, and the reporters are no longer required to take the reports on their shirt cuffs. We wonder if, in these hard times, newspaper men will afford to wear clean ones, even though police notes are not taken on them.

Swell Suits at Spencer's.

THE WHIG.—The Kingston Whig has just moved into larger and more convenient quarters, so as to give increased accommodation to increased business. The Whig is one of the oldest papers in the Province, but it loses nothing of its vigor by age. Under the control of Mr. Pense it is much more ably conducted and more prosperous and influential than ever before. We look upon it as the best sustained daily published in the Province, east of Toronto.

If you want the best sitting pants go to SPENCER.

MUCH NEEDED IMPROVEMENTS.—We are glad to notice that our Town Fathers have commenced, in good earnest, to "mend their ways." New crossings are being made in several places along Duudas street, so that probably, the street may be hereafter crossed without the contact to mud

FIRST SNOW.—On Sunday afternoon last there was a slight fall of hail, and on Wednesday afternoon a very slight flurry of snow. Truly "the winter of discontent" is upon us.

ACQUITTED.—The Grand Jury at the Assizes last week, threw out the case against Hiram Young, who was committed for trial on a charge of arson. The evidence was not deemed of a strong enough nature to warrant finding a true bill.

FALL OPENINGS.—During the past week our dry goods merchants have had their openings of fall and winter goods, millinery, mantles, &c. Their stores were all very handsomely fitted up, and were visited by crowds of people. We have had neither time nor space this week to go into any account of how the different shops were fixed up.

ENTERPRISE.—Read the mammoth advertisements of Messrs Slaven & Ironside and Fraser & Rennie on our outside page. These gentlemen know how to make business in the hard times. They have good news for the people, and they take the proper course to let them know it.

My Cost Sale for Cash only lasts a short time, at SPENCER'S.

A GOOD ENTERPRISE.—On Saturday last Mr. Geo. Soby, of Shannonville, brought to town a car load of potatoes, from Three Rivers, Qc. The potatoes were good, and sold like hot cakes at 85c a bag. There is a likelihood of a scarcity of potatoes this winter, and the man who will bring the "Murphys" here, and thus bring down prices, will benefit himself and the public. Let us have a good deal more, George.

THE PICTON SHOW.—The steamers Norfolk and Shannon left on Tuesday morning for Picton, with very few passengers, for the County Show. Many from here had intended going, but the morning looked very treacherous and consequently kept people home. We are informed the show was by no means a success, so far as the articles shown were concerned. There was a big crowd of people present, however.

Bound to do business at SPENCER'S.

CHANGE OF FIRM.—The business heretofore carried on by Spencer & Hogan, as clothiers, &c., has been dissolved, and now Mr. Henry Spencer has taken full control of the same. Notwithstanding various rumors were afloat, Henry is still a "solid man," will be through in a couple of weeks, and nothing then remains but the touches of the painters brush.

The windows are now in, and to say that they are neat, or even beautiful, would not give an adequate idea of them. The beautiful circular window in the North end, the gift of Dr. Rutan, is one of the finest windows of the kind that we ever saw. The colours are neat and delicate, and beautifully blended. There is, also, a beautiful memorial window in the east side, the present of R. Wright, Esq. in memory of their lovely child, who died last year. Two other windows are of coloured glass, with metal sash, and very neat and chaste in their design.

The entire internal appearance is quite different from any other church in these counties, and the contrast is a pleasing one. Great credit is due to the Rev. Mr. Bogert, and his energetic assistants, of the Building Committee, for their energy and perseverance, under difficulties of no ordinary character, in the erection of this fine church.

THE GRAIN MARKET.—We are glad to know that, at last grain is beginning to come in pretty freely. The farmers who have been waiting, for some time, for a rise have given up waiting longer. The prices in Napanee and Mill Point remain about as they were:—viz., 65 and 70 cents per bushel for barley, according to grade. Mr. Baker informs us that large quantities are coming into Mill Point also, where the same rates are being paid. The Grangers have entered a store house in Napanee and are storing theirs, hoping for better rates.

The Toronto papers of yesterday give the following report:—

Barley.—The market was firm a week ago, and on Friday and Saturday it declined fully four cents. At the close of last week No. 1 sold at 78c. and No. 2 was worth 72c. f. o. b. Yesterday the favourable turn taken by American markets made prices firmer, and to-day there were sales of No. 1 at 80c. f. o. b. in car lots. Bids of 82c. f. o. b., were subsequently refused. The grade this evening appears to be worth 81c. @ 82c. No. 2 also improved since Saturday, and there were sales of car lots to day at 73c. f. o. b., a figure which fairly represents closing prices.

At Belleville barley is quoted, yesterday, at from 50 to 70 cents. At Picton, according to the "Times" 60 cents.

"IN THE MORNING SOW THY SEED."

Solomon was a wise man. It is better to sow late than not to sow at all; but early sowing is the best. If a thing is worth doing at all the sooner it is done the better. It is interesting to see an old man sowing the seeds of knowledge in mastering the elements of some department of learning; but the interest we have in it is not without a tinge of painfulness. There is something melancholy about a man doing with difficulty at fifty what he could have done with ease at twelve,

MUCH NEEDED IMPROVEMENTS.—We are glad to notice that our Town Fathers have commenced, in good earnest, to "mend their ways." New crossings are being made in several places along Duudas street, so that probably, the street may be hereafter crossed without the contact to mud formerly experienced. The dangerous and unsightly ridges, left by the gas company's men, are being levelled down and the stones broken fine. Chief Allen, is giving the work good personal inspection and a good job is being done.

I am determined not to forget my good old Credit Customers, and will sell to them just the same as ever. SPENCER.

Cash I want and must have it. SPENCER.

A GOOD PAPER.—The Temperance Union, the organ of the United Temperance Order, is now printed and published in Belleville. It is printed in the office of McCullough & Hynes, and certainly does credit to their skill. The editor, Rev. Mr. Austin, is also deserving of much credit. From a pretty thorough acquaintance with the temperance journals of Canada we have little hesitation in putting the Union now at the head of the list of Canadian temperance papers. It has a remarkably clean face, and apparently clean hands also.

My Cutter gives the most perfect satisfaction. SPENCER.

DUNKIN IN FRONTENAC.—The temperance men of Frontenac are beginning to arouse themselves in regard to the coming election in that County in regard to the Dunkin By-Law. At a meeting held on Friday last, Committees were appointed for each township in the County to make such arrangements as may be deemed necessary for the success of the by-law. An advisory Committee was also appointed, consisting of Messrs T. W. Casey, of Napanee; Mayor Britton, Kingston; Dr. Dickson, Notwithstanding various rumors were afloat, Henry is still a "solid man," and is determined to push the tailoring business still more than ever. Orders for clothing entrusted to him will be sure to give satisfaction, as the services of a first-class cutter have been secured.

A big excitement over Spencer's Cost Sale for Cash.

GIRARD'S SECRET.—Stephen Girard used to say in his old age: "I have always considered advertising liberally and long to be the great medium of success in business, and therefore wealth. And I have made it an invariable rule to advertise in the dullest times as well as the busiest, long experience having taught me that money thus spent is well laid out, as by continually keeping business before the public it has secured many sales that I would have otherwise lost."

MONEY NEEDED.—In consideration of the exceedingly hard times the Publisher of the Express has put himself to no little inconvenience throughout this year, so as to make it easy for those doing business with him. It will now be necessary, however, for persons owing for subscription or otherwise to make payment. Money is needed, and if each one will hand in the small amount due by him there will be no difficulty. Friends, don't compel us to use "legal suasion," as we don't want to do that, unless other means fail. You will feel happier and more content when you have paid the printer.

If he had soved early probably the crop would have not only been, in all probability, in kind but the yield would have been larger. He would have had in every respect a better return for his labour.

If a man desires to get wealth, early sowing is the best. If, in this respect, you would make the best of life, begin early. The earlier in life a man acquires a thorough knowledge of this business the better. The most skillful artisan as a rule, is the one who learned his trade young. The great artists as a rule not only showed a predilection for art while they were yet quite young, but actually made their first essays in it while they were yet children. A man seldom becomes a man of letters who does not begin to apply himself to literary pursuits very early in life, even ministers and editors, though everybody seems to think that he could fill either of their professions, to really distinguish themselves in their respective professions require to begin young.

LITERARY ENTERTAINMENT.—The entertainment under the auspices of the Good Templars at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening last proved to be one of the best of the season. The audience, however, was not as large as the entertainment deserved. The musical part of the programme was borne by Mrs. G. Mills, Miss Maud Day, Miss Pennycook, and Miss Mary Fraser, and Messrs. Middleton and Mills. All of the the singers acquitted themselves in a very creditable manner, and elicited hearty applause. The accompaniments were played by Miss Herring, who presides at the instrument with a great deal of ability. The literary part was furnished by Messrs. Tilley and Matheson, of the High School, and Messrs. R. S. Neville, W. S. Williams and J. A. Dawson. The organ used on the occasion was kindly furnished by Henry & Bro. The net proceeds amounted to about $15

FAREWELL SOCIAL.—The farewell social to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Lane, in the M. E. Church, on Tuesday evening last, was poorly attended. Those who were there, however, spent a very pleasant evening. A very interesting feature of the meeting was the presentation of an address and a large album to Mrs. Lane, by the members of the choir. Also the presentation of life-size portraits to the retiring pastor and wife, and a sum of money to the former. The portraits were executed by Mr. Hulett, who bore the biggest share of the expense. The chair was filled by A. L. Morden, Esq., and addresses were delivered by the local ministers and others.

THE NEW CHURCH.—The New Episcopalian Church of this town, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is but faint praise to it to say that, when completed, it will be an ornament and a credit to Napanee. The walls of the building are of the most substantial character, and its external appearance is good, but the internal finish is certainly of a superior order. The plasterers have about completed their work, and they have done it well. The joiner work is also nearly completed. The pews are of a neat and elaborate design, and well in keeping with the general style of the architecture. The joiners have had in every respect a better return for his labour.

We should not notice what the sauce-box says, only that these other people who have more sense, who view the subject in just the same light that our "devil" does. They imagine that the longer they can put this matter off the better bargain they can make.

These persons always leave out of the calculation the risk they run in putting off the insurance of their life to somewhat late in life. They forget there are thousands who die every year without having their lives insured, who, for many years, fully inspected to insure. They put it off to a more convenient season, as they hoped that by delaying the matter they could get the more for their money. The longer they lived without any indication of declining health or approaching dissolution, the more careless did they become about it, until symptoms began to develop themselves which put life insurance beyond their power forever. Others who have been acting in the same way have been stricken down by accident in a moment. There are thousands of suffering widows, and dependant orphans to-day, who have been placed in the distressing position which they occupy to-day by this wrong way of looking at the matter of life insurance.

The earlier one begins to invest in life insurance, the cheaper is the rate. Then if the insurance is on the straight life plan, payable at death, and the assured desires it he can pay up the whole premium in a given number of years, say ten years, before the burdens of life have come very heavily upon him. In this way the whole thing is disposed of and out of the way, and there is just so much cash at the credit of the assured's family payable whenever his death may occur, or if the insurance is effected on the endowment plan, the assured may by beginning

In respect to life assurance as well as other things, we believe the wiser way is to begin early. In the morning sow thy seed. We are sure if our estate and philosophic friend C. F. Russell, Esq., were here he would confirm this view. We know Mr. W. Hanson, Agent of the Hartford Travellers Life Insurance Company across the way, will back us against the "devil."

Napanee, Oct. 9th, 1876.

To Mr. W. HANSON.
DEAR SIR,—As executor to the estate of the late A. J. Andrews, I beg to thank the Travellers Accident Insurance Company, through you, for the prompt payment of his claim of $75, for an accident which he received about a month before his death, whilst bathing in the bay.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with trouble of the breast, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and to easy-going and indifferent doctors, separate and distinct diseases. Assuming them to be such, he prescribes his pills and potions; when, in reality, all these symptoms are caused by some uterine disorder. While they are thus only able perhaps to palliate the disease for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and complications made, and which a proper medicine, directed to the cause, would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort instead of prolonged misery.

From Miss Corinda E. St. Clair, Shade, Athens Co., O., Oct. 14th 1872.

"Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.,—Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me, I am better already than I have been for over two years."

From Ella A. Schofer, Zanesville, Ind., Aug. 3, 1873:

"Dr. Pierce.—I received the medicine you sent me, and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment, I feel better than I have for three years."

From Mrs. John K. Hamlin, Odell, Ill., Mar. 16, 1872:

"Dr. Pierce.—The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am very thankful for."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is sold by Druggists.

EPPS COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the nature laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. WHAT THEY SAY OF IT! A FEW FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.—There are but few preparations of medicines which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Read the following and be convinced:—Thos. Robinson, Farnham Centre, P. Q., writes, "I have been afflicted with rheumatism or he ast ten years, and have tried many remedies without any relief, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. and since then have had no attack of it. I would recommend it to all."—J. H. Earl, Hotel Keeper, West Sheffield, P. Q., writes, "I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horses in cases of cuts, wounds, etc., and think it is equally as good for horse as for man."—A. Maybee, Merchant, Warkworth, writes, "I have sold some hundreds of bottles of Electric Oil, and it is pronounced by the public, 'one of the best medicines they have ever used;' it has done wonders in healing and relieving pain, sore throats, etc., and is worthy of the greatest confidence."—Joseph Rusan, Township Percy, writes, "I was persuaded to try Thomas' Electric Oil for a lame knee? which troubled me for three or four years, and I never found anything like it for curing lameness. It is a great public benefit."—A. M. Hamilton, Warkworth, writes, "For weeks I was troubled with a swelled ankle, which annoyed me very much. Mr. Maybee of this place induced me to try Electric Oil, and before one bottle was used I was cured. It is a most remarkable medicine. Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25cts.

uterine disorder. While they are thus only able perhaps to palliate the disease for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and complications made, and which a proper medicine, directed to the cause, would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort instead of prolonged misery.

The Vienna proceeds at the gates were $993,025.25. The Philadelphia proceeds at the gates to Saturday night were $1,884,534.

The Chinese always leave a meal at a grave, that a dead person may eat on the way to eternity. In former times it was customary in Nevada to leave the food exposed, and the loafers who watched from a neighboring clump of trees were wont to regale themselves with these dainties. "Nothing is so pleasant," says the Virginia City Chronicle, "as to see a crowd of hoodlums seated on a new-made Chinese grave, going through a free lunch, and drinking the deceased's good health in his own rice brandy. Now, however, the Chinese place a guard over the grave until night, after which the wild animals and birds get the benefit of the repast."

PICKLED CUCUMBERS IN SUMMER.

It is often desirable to have new pickles in summer time, and after sliced cucumbers have ceased to be a novelty, the small ones pickled are an agreeable change. They can be made at short notice by the following method, which our folks have fully tested during the past few weeks: Cover 100 small cucumbers with a pint of salt, and add a small piece of alum. Then pour boiling water over them, and keep closely covered a few hours. Take them out, wipe dry and lay in jars with a few red peppers, allspice, a tablespoonful of mustard seed, pepper corn and cloves. These condiments may be varied or changed to suit taste. Then pour over the whole sufficient hot vinegar to cover the pickles. When cold, they will be ready for the table and as green and fresh looking as when picked. Cucumbers picked early in the morning may be made ready for tea the same afternoon, which is often a desirable consideration to housewives. Pickles made thus will keep any length of time desired, if not eaten.

Soap suds may be used with great advantage for manuring grape vines. Downing says he has seen an Isabella grape vine produce 3,000 fine clusters of well-ripened fruit in a season, by the liberal use of manure and soap-suds from the weekly wash. The effects of soap-suds on other plants are remarkable.

All small birds should be well picked, drawn and wiped inside and outside, but never wet, as it destroys their flavor to put them in water. Stuff with dressing made of bread crumbs and butter, highly seasoned. Sew up the opening and truss like larger birds. Roast from twenty to thirty minutes. Serve on toast, and with currant or some other acid jelly.

Fuchsias require more water than geraniums and roses, yet it is impor-

been done intelligently, and with a definite object in view, a mixture of varieties usually results in their deterioration. Having determined on the kind desired, the earliest and best specimens of that should be chosen for producing seed. It is bad policy to use the earliest and best for other purposes and save seed from the plants that have been culled over; nor should the good, bad and indifferent, be all mixed together and this average product be used for seed. This is sure to lead to degeneracy. The most promising plants having been set apart for seed raising, they should have the very best of cultivation. The idea is not to get a large, unnatural, succulent growth but a strong, vigorous, healthy growth. If the plant is of a branching nature, the seed from the lower and weaker branches should be rejected, and that from the more central vigorous ones alone be saved. It is important that all seeds intended for planting should be well ripened up before being harvested. For other purposes it is sometimes best to harvest before the stage of thorough ripeness has been reached. As, for instance, wheat will make more and better flour if harvested when in the dough state, or from a week to ten days before ripeness; but if intended for seed it should stand till it has become, so to speak, dead ripe. All seeds in this state of complete ripeness have all their constituents in the highest state of development. Such seeds will preserve their germinative power under greater extremes of temperature and humidity, and they will retain their vitality longer under the same condition, than will these gathered when less mature.

When the time comes for harvesting, a large portion of the stalk, straw, branch, or whatever it grew upon, should be placed in a dry, cool, airy place till thoroughly dried out. The most suitable conditions for this are probably found in an open building or shed through which the air can readily pass. It should be left in this condition till thoroughly dry. During this drying process considerable nutriment will be conveyed from the stalk to the seed, thus increasing their plumpness and weight. When thoroughly dry the seeds may be threshed or shelled at any convenient time. The seeds should then be placed in the most favorable conditions to keep and preserve their vitality. These conditions are that Fuchsias require more water than geraniums and roses, yet it is important not to give them so much that the soil becomes sodden, as the small, fibrous roots will decay if kept too moist. But if watered twice a week with weak liquid manures, or with a tablespoonful of guano, dissolved in a gallon of hot water, and allowed to stand until nearly cool, buds will often appear where nothing but leaves have been seen for months.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Here is the best recipe for making Charlotte Russe: Take one quart cream, beat to a froth (best and quickest done with a Dover egg-beater), sweeten with about four tablepoonfuls of sugar; then flavor. Put one-half box gelatine in milk sufficient to moisten it; set where it will warm gradually; stir often; when dissolved add to the prepared cream. Line a dish with sponge-cake sliced, or with "lady-fingers," pour the cream into it, and set it on a cool place.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

SQUASH FRITTERS.—Take three medium-sized squashes, pare, cut up and boil tender, mash and drain thoroughly, season with pepper and salt, add one cupful of milk (cream is better), the yolk of two eggs, and sufficient sifted flour to make a very stiff batter, or they will be hard to turn; lastly, stir in the beaten whites of the eggs. When thoroughly dry the seeds may be threshed or shelled at any convenient time. The seeds should then be placed in the most favorable conditions to keep and preserve their vitality. These conditions are that they be kept free from the influence of heat, frost and moisture; though it is true that many seeds will endure great extremes of all of these, yet it is best not to expose seed designed for planting to any great extremes. Perhaps the best way to preserve seed, where but a small quantity is kept, is to tie up securely in paper sacks and hang up in a cool, airy, dry place. Care should be taken to have them out of the reach of mice, as they are quite fond of many kinds of seeds, and will prove quite destructive of them if allowed access to them.

As to the length of time that seeds may be kept without losing their vitality, there seems to be a variation with almost every variety of seed, and with every different method of preserving. While seeds can be so easily raised, it will not pay to run any risk by planting seed of doubtful vitality. By following the above hints every one may have a supply of their own of reliable seeds to draw from, and such a course will scarcely fail to result in an improvement in cultivated plants.—Ohio Farmer.

FARM FOR SALE. A Rare Opportunity.

The undersigned offers for sale his valuable and desirable farm, being part of Lots 27 and 28, Seventh Concession of North Fredericksburgh, known as Mount Pleasant.

The farm is beautifully located two miles from Napanee, on the leading County Road to Newburgh. It contains 125 acres, 25 of which is well timbered and very valuable. The other 100 acres are in a fine state of cultivation, and well fenced. It has been largely devoted to dairy purposes for some years, and is therefore in a superior condition. The land is well underdrained, having nearly 2 miles of underdrains, mostly tile drains.

There is a good dwelling house, nearly new, with all necessary outbuildings. There are large and well arranged barns and sheds, with extensive stabling for both cows and horses.

There is a large orchard, in an excellent fruit bearing condition.

The farm is splendidly watered. Besides two good wells, there is an overflowing stream of spring water, where the stock are always well supplied.

The place is most desirably situated for a good home. It is in sight of Napanee, and the roads always good. Immediately opposite the house is a first-class school. The location is a most healthy one.

Have your fat hot and fry brown. Prepared in this way, you have a dish that could not ail to satisfy the palate of any one, even were they as dainty as some of the old Roman dignitaries, who feasted on the tongues and brains of rare birds.

SCOTCH CAKE.—Two pounds flour, one pound butter, half pound powdered sugar; chop flour and butter quite soft by setting near fire. Knead in the sugar. Roll into a sheet not quite half an inch thick; cut in two-inch squares. When you want them to look nice put a few sugar comforts in center; they will stick by pressing them on with your finger. Any confectioner will sell five cents worth; that is enough for a batch. Don't get all one color. Bake light brown. Put in stone crock for a few days. They will get soft—just melt in your mouth.

SAVING SEEDS.

A very important factor in all good farming is to have good seed to start with. And while the seedsman is a very important and member of society to whom application should frequently be made for something new, or for a change of seed, yet in the main the farmer, often the gardeners, should raise his own seed. In order to the highest success in this enterprise there are several rules that should be observed. Some of these I will name. First, the seed selected should be of some pure, unmixed variety, for, except in some rare cases in which the operation has them. As to the length of time that seeds may be kept without losing their vitality, there seems to be a variation with almost every variety of seed, and with every different method of preserving. INGENIOUS GERMAN INVENTIONS.

A Hartford gentleman recently received from a friend in Germany samples of several recent inventions in that country. One is a gun cane, resembling bamboo, and the only feature in which it differs from an ordinary cane in appearance is a small steel handle, pressure on which discharges the weapon. The barrel, rifled, is of thirty caliber, and the muzzle, when the cane is used in walking, is stopped by a piece of gutta percha with steel ferule. To load the weapon the cane is pulled from either end, and the parts slide apart about two inches, uncovering the chamber in which the cartridge is placed. On closing the parts together the gun is ready except to set the trigger, the firing mechanism working on the same principle as a needle gun.

Another pretty invention of German silver is about the size of an opera brand cigar, and occupies less space in the pocket than a match-safe. It is a folding cork-screw, and on separating the parts of the German silver cases, cylindrical in form, the screw comes out, and by partially pushing the case together, the screw is firmly set in position, its square shank fitting into a square slot in the case.

A patent stopper for bottles is made of porcelain, an inch long, with rubber rings midway. On placing this in the bottle and turning the stopper the rings are expanded, hermetically sealing the bottle and making it impossible to remove the stopper by pulling. Another stopper of the same kind has a key at the top. On turning this key the rings are expanded, and then the key being removed, it is impossible for anyone to get the stopper out without a duplicate key. The gentleman showing this invention says that in Germany it is used to prevent servants and others from taking wine from bottles that have been opened and only partly emptied, and that this practical advantage has brought it into large demand among the economical people in that country. —New Haven Palladium.

I have been one of the greatest sufferers from the effects of Asthma, having had it in its most violent form for twenty-two years; for the last six years of that time I had not lain six nights in bed, and in an year had such severe pain in my left side that I could not rest on it, my appetite was gone, and I had swelling in the region of my stomach, and general weakness. This condition was constantly increasing, and worse, until last December, when I felt that I was in a desperate case. I then bought a box of DR. JAMES' PAIN EXPELLER, although I had never heard of it, because, as I yielded to the pain of others, I thought I would try it. The first dose I took relieved the difficulty of my breathing, and before I had two bottles used I was completely cured, and have since enjoyed as good health as ever. I do

From Dr. Duncan McCallum, Montreal.

I, the undersigned, have been suffering very much for the last two years from Rheumatism in the ankle joint, so much that I was often prevented from attending to my calling, but three applications of Dr. Burnbaum's Rheumatism and Gout Remedy gave me that relief from pain and stiffness which I did not experience for the last two years, and after eight days' use of that remedy, I find myself entirely cured.

I owe this statement to the public, to the profession, and to the merits of the genuine article.

The Young Boston Lady.

Professor Jim's Trials.

"Feel a little stiff, eh, Jim?" asked Farmer Wilbor of his brother, as at evening they sat in the porch of the old homestead.

"Yes; but, I shall sleep as I have not for months," said the young professor from C— College. "I have abused my brains lately; but I hope for much from a few weeks of outdoor life."

"I see you have some muscle yet, and this is the main thing; but you'll find it dull stayin' here—no society for you."

"No, thank heaven!" said the professor, perfuming the air with a choice cigar.

"There's the young lady from Boston,"
quoth Mrs. Wilbor, coming to the door.
"The what?" asked "Prof. Jim," as she called him for politeness' sake.

"Oh, we have taken a summer boarder
—a Miss Emerson, from Boston."

"The deuce you have!" was what the gentleman wanted to say. He swallowed it down with the quick thought that, in hard times a paying visitor might be better than a privileged one, and he, being the last, must not stand in the way of the first.

"Don't you like Boston ladies?" asked his sister-in-law.

"Oh, I like everything wonderful in art and nature; but just now, as the organ-grinder puts it, 'I know the value
o' peace and quietness.'"

"She won't hurt you—will she?"

"She will talk to me—she can't help it,
'for it is her nature to.' She will start discussions on the Over-Soul and pre-Raphaelitism. I want to talk about prize pigs and dig potatoes, get an appetite
like a savage and wear out my old shirts.
How can I do all that in the atmosphere
of a young lady from Boston?"

"Easy as not," grunted the farmer.

"No; I'm foiled. I know the race. I had hoped to be at rest—to flee to some spot where—where" (with a salaam to the farmer) "only man is vile."

"Don't let her know," suggested Mrs.
Wilbor, "that you have an 'idea' on them heathenish subjects. We can pass you off as a farm-hand, hired for the busy season."

"Sarah Wilbor, I am proud to be, by marriage, related to you! You have made the telling speech of the evening,"
said the professor.

"You ain't got much beauty to spoil,
anyway," added the farmer; "and you're
black enough to be sunburned, anyway,
let your hair run wild and keep your mouth shut, and maybe she won't know
the schoolmaster is about."

"Agreed!" cried the professor, and
went to bed in serenity.

He was not averse to being entertained
if no social demands were made upon him. He was even now pleased at seeing the young lady from Boston; but in the morning he had quite forgotten
her.

About one week later the professor was
at work in the cornfield: at one side was
a creek, in whose clear water the cows
ruminated under willows that overhung
the bank. Beyond were flats, overgrown
with greenest flags, and then wheat-fields,
with rolling hills in the distance.
Near him, as he stood at the further

I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. I was in this condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.

"You have got much beauty to spare," added the farmer; "and you black enough to be sunburned, any less your hair run wild and keep your mouth shut, and maybe she won't let the schoolmaster is abroad."

He was not averse to being entertained if no social demands were made upon him. He was even now pleased at seeing the young lady from Boston; in the morning he had quite forgotten her.

About one week later the professor at work in the cornfield: at one side a creek, in whose clear water the corn ripened under willows that overhung the bank. Beyond were flats, overgrown with greenest flags, and then wheat-fields with rolling hills in the distance.

Near him, as he stood at the fur end of the lot, was a patch of woods, whose long shadows the professor gazing. He could not be said to be very steady hand at farming. He more than once stopped work and played in there among the flickering light and falling acorns, and showed far more enthusiasm over some tiny bit of vegetation than over the pigs he professed to admire.

That day he was planning a slight upon the cornbills which he was hoeing, when—out from a wing of woods darted a figure, which sped by on the wind, and left him with two conflicting ideas—was it an escaped lunatic—was it the farmer's scarecrow, who suddenly felt its life in every limb? For beyond him when he turned was the flit of flying garments streaming from a Atlantis-like figure which fled first in now there, now toward the creek; for a raid upon the cows; now back off again like a tangent; while stretched out before it, and wildly bristling in the air, was a slender wending in a hoop, and a net distal like a balloon.

Ere the astonished professor could take his breath, the ground was smitten by the wand, the balloon flitted over a tant corn-hill capping it like a bee, and the lunatic sank on her knees before it.

"Professor Jim" strode before in unmeasured amazement, his whole person animated interrogation point, reached the spot, and at the first glance, would fain have retreated; but was too late. It was the young from Boston. She had seen him, had marked him for her own. What was doing was a mystery; but she he on closer proximity, was not at all a scarecrow, whatever might be said of a lunatic question. The puffs and flour and sashes of her buff morning had been all adroit on the morning but now settled about her like a cardinal's ruffled plumage. Her shodded cape hung from her neck, which had tumbled her light brown and what could be seen of her face under a sun-hat the size of a Chinese pagoda was not at all ugly. Her lips and clear grey eyes were all with eagerness.

"I was determined I'd have him? cried, with a glance at Prof. Jim's sleeves. "Such a splendid fellow chased him over three stone walls, around and around the woods. I want your help in putting ether to nose."

A wild fancy shot through the professor's head; that he had so overworn his brain, that dreadful hallucinations were coming upon him. He gasped for "Whose nose?"
The young girl's laugh was like quick clang of silver bells; then daintily peeped into the balloon, wh

One of the Testimonials.

From Dr. Duncan McCallum, Montreal.

I, the undersigned, have been suffering very much for the last two years from Rheumatism in the ankle joint, so much that I was often prevented from attending to my calling, but three applications of Dr. Burnbaum's Rheumatism and Gout Remedy gave me that relief from pain and stiffness which I did not experience for the last two years, and after eight days' use of that remedy, I find myself entirely cured.

I owe this statement to the public, to the profession, and to the merits of the genuine article.

The Young Boston Lady.

Professor Jim's Trials.

"Feel a little stiff, eh, Jim?" asked Farmer Wilbor of his brother, as at evening they sat in the porch of the old homestead.

"Yes; but, I shall sleep as I have not for months," said the young professor from C— College. "I have abused my brains lately; but I hope for much from a few weeks of outdoor life."

"I see you have some muscle yet, and this is the main thing; but you'll find it dull stayin' here—no society for you."

"No, thank heaven!" said the professor, perfuming the air with a choice cigar.

"There's the young lady from Boston," quoth Mrs. Wilbor, coming to the door.

"The what?" asked "Prof. Jim," as she called him for politeness' sake.

"Oh, we have taken a summer boarder—a Miss Emerson, from Boston."

"The deuce you have!" was what the gentleman wanted to say. He swallowed it down with the quick thought that, in hard times a paying visitor might be better than a privileged one, and he, being the last, must not stand in the way of the first.

"Don't you like Boston ladies?" asked his sister-in-law.

"Oh, I like everything wonderful in art and nature; but just now, as the organ-grinder puts it, 'I know the value of peace and quietness.'"

"She won't hurt you—will she?"

"She will talk to me—she can't help it, for it is her nature to." She will start discussions on the Over-Soul and pre-Raphaelitism. I want to talk about prize pigs and dig potatoes, get an appetite like a savage and wear out my old shirts. How can I do all that in the atmosphere of a young lady from Boston?"

"Easy as not," grunted the farmer.

"No; I'm foiled. I know the race. I had hoped to be at rest—to flee to some spot where 'where' (with a salutation to the farmer) 'only man is vile.'"

"Don't let her know," suggested Mrs. Wilbor, "that you have an 'idea' on your headenish subjects. We can pass you off as a farm-hand, hired for the busy season."

"Sarah Wilbor, I am proud to be, by marriage, related to you! You have made the telling speech of the evening," said the professor.

"You ain't got much beauty to spoil, anyway," added the farmer; "and you're black enough to be sunburned, anyway, let your hair run wild and keep your mouth shut, and maybe she won't know the schoolmaster is abroad."

"Agreed!" cried the professor, and went to bed in serenity.

He was not averse to being entertained if no social demands were made upon him. He was even now pleased at seeing the young lady from Boston, and in the morning he had quite forgotten her.

About one week later the professor was at work in the cornfield—at one side was a creek in whose clear water the cows ruminated under willows that overhung the bank. Beyond were flats, overgrown with coarse grass and then wheat fields, peremptorily, as if Jim had been torturing the little wretch quite on his own account. "I can't hurt him so!" and suddenly uplifting her hand, she gently released the prisoner, who had not been at all overcome with the odor, and who now floated like a frog let loose from a lily-bell.

"If that is what I must do for a collection, I shall never have one. I am much obliged to you."

As he turned to go—giving her back the bottle—he caught sight of the cloudless blue over her, of the sleepy cattle in the low, slashing water of the green flats shimmering in the sunshine.

"Is it not all perfect?" she added looking directly into his face, with her clear eyes full of admiration. Had the veriest clodhopper been in his place, that appeal for innocent sympathy, would have touched him into a sense of kinship with nature and the young girl. Her gentle dismissal a moment later pleased him also, and he went back, thinking as he trod the plowed ground, "So this is the young lady from Boston—yes, a lady, and I like her just as well that she could not finish the 'poor little devil of a bug,' as Pat would call it. Then he laughed.

"How she turned on him too when he struggled, quite as if I had done the pinching—that is the woman of it! Butterfly collections hobby first—and that is the Boston of it. Well, I shall have amusement, mayhap."

"Mrs Wilbor, that dark complexioned young farmer of yours has an intelligent face." It was Miss Emerson who spoke, and sat one evening with the farmer's wife. On this occasion her hair was exquisitely smooth and faultless, and her manner repose itself.

"Yes, Jim isn't wooden headed. He always had a hankering after learning."

"Can he read and write?"

"Mercy, yes; child? every New England fellow can do that and more."

"Of course. Well—is he much of a reader?"

"Pretty considerable—newspapers and what he picks up. He never will be satisfied that he knows enough."

"I like that," said the young lady with ardor; "It is very commendable for such a person."

"To be sure," giggled Mrs Wilbor over a wash-towel she was hemming. "his hand-writing might be better; I can with difficulty make it out."

"Doubtless he came of good stock," said Miss Emerson, who, in a mild way, used to deal out Oliver Wendell Holmes' theories. "He has a good accent; no talks of very common things, but his ideas are clear cut."

"Yes," said Mrs Wilbor, "if you could draw him out, you would do him good."

"Then I will certainly try," returned the young lady from Boston, her soul filled with philanthropic sentiments.

Meanwhile the professor of Greek, Latin, and 'belles lettres,' washed his unblushing face in the basin behind the kitchen door, and smiled and smiled, and was just as determined to be, to a limited extent a 'villain still.'

A little later he came out and set down on the lowest step of the piazza, considerably below Miss Emerson. After a while Mrs. Wilbor was called away, and the two were left together. The last flush of daylight was fading off the tops of the oak

ting room, and hold sleepy conversations with Mr. Wilbor.

Often James used to sit near by and smoke very good-smelling cigars on the piazza. She surprised him one day reading "Ivanho," which she had dropped there; and, again intent on his mental culture, she encouraged him to read aloud. It was pleasant for her and good for him; so, day after day he read Scott.

Each time when he had ended, and gone away, she had wondered he had read so simply well, she had forgotten the reader; only sometime, looking up she had caught him looking at her so—well, so strangely; it was intensely respectful, but peculiar.

When one day reading a love scene, his voice fell and trembled, she said to herself, "He must have a sensitive nature."

She mused a while, and firmly resolved to cease her efforts in behalf of this young man. She might be making trouble for him. One caught human butterflies, sometimes, when one never thought of chasing them. Then, they suffered if you held them tightly, and it was not a legal method of getting rid of them to hold them under their noses until they died.

After this resolution Prof. Jim did not see the young lady for a week. She took her meals at quite irregular hours, and sat no more on the piazza. He was therefore off his guard, and one day peering in the kitchen where Mrs. Wilbor fried potatoes, he fell into the deepest of reveries.

"What are you planning Prof? You've not taken your eyes of the copper tea-kettle for ten minutes."

"My dear sister, I was recalling to mind a line of Virgil—Omnia vincit amor, et nos cedamus amori."

"I know all about it now," said Sarah, who was not a Bostonian, and so did not understand Latin.

Prof. Jim laughed gleefully, and went out. Miss Emerson, who had overheard the unlucky quotation came in.

"Mrs. Wilbor, who is that man?"

It is needless to say that Mrs. Wilbor had to tell; and if ever two eyes gleamed with wrath, the two grey orbs pertaining to the Boston lady were the very ones. She grew every moment more irate.

"Think of it, I teaching a college professor easy Latin out of a primer, and his submitting rather than to have to make my acquaintance. He shall never have that annoyance or fear—never—never again."

Poor Jim! He was wretched thereafter. He made every attempt consistent with any sort of dignity, to effect a reconciliation; but she declined to even answer Mrs. Wilbor, who he implored to act as a mediator.

The time set for her return to Boston came on apace, and the professor began to pass sleepless nights; but, inexorable to the last, Miss Emerson refused even to see him.

She chose a day when he had gone away, and in spite of a threatened storm insisted on going home in the evening train.

She had gone about a half an hour when he returned, and nothing had so depressed him for years as the fact of her absence. With a look that had more than once told for him in the class-room

About one week later the professor was
at work in the cornfield: at one side was
a creek, in whose clear water the cows
ruminated under willows that overhung
the bank. Beyond were flats, overgrown
with greenest flags, and then wheat-fields,
with rolling hills in the distance.

Near him, as he stood at the further

whose long shadows the professor was very steady hand at farming. He had more than once stopped work and plunged

That day he was planning a similar sight upon the cornhills which he was hoeing, when—out from a wing of the woods darted a figure, which sped by him
on the wind, and left him with two conflicting ideas—was it an escaped lunatic?
—was it the farmer's scarecrow, who of a sudden felt its life in every limb? For, beyond him when he turned was the flutter of flying garments streaming from the Atalanta-like figure which fled first here,
now there, now toward the creek, as if
for a raid upon the cows; now back and off again like a tangent; while ever stretched out before it, and wildly brand-
ished in the air, was a slender wand, ending in a hoop, and a net distended
like a balloon.

Ere the astonished professor could draw
his breath, the ground was smitten with the wand, the balloon flitted over a distant corn-hill capping it like a bee-hive,
and the lunatic sank on her knees before
it.

"Professor Jim" strode before it in unmeasured amazement, his whole being one animated interrogation point, he reached the spot, and at the first near glance, would fain have retreated; but it was too late. It was the young lady from Boston. She had seen him, and had marked him for her own. What she was doing was a mystery; but she herself,
on closer proximity, was not at all like a scarecrow, whatever might be said of the lunatic question. The puffs and flounces and sashes of her buff morning dress
had been adrift on the morning breeze,
but now settled about her like a canary bird's ruffled plumage. Her scarlet hooded cape hung from her neck, into which had tumbled her light brown hair,
and what could be seen of her face from under a sun-bat the size of a Chinese pagoda was not at all ugly. Cheeks, lips and clear grey eyes were all aglow
with eagerness.

"I was determined I'd have him?" she cried, with a glance at Prof. Jim's shirt sleeves. "Such a splendid fellow! I chased him over three stone walls, and around and around the woods. Now I want your help in putting ether to his nose."

A wild fancy shot through the professor's head; that he had so overworked
his brain, that dreadful hallucinations were coming upon him. He gasped faintly,
"Whose nose?"

The young girl's laugh was like the quick clang of silver bells; then she daintily peeped into the balloon, whispering:

what she picked up. "I never will be satisfied that he knows enough."

"Like that," said the young lady with kitchen door, and smiled and smiled,

and was just as determined to be, to a limited extent a 'villain still.'

A little later he came out and set down
on the lowest step of the piazza, considerably below Miss Emerson. After a while Mrs. Wilbor was called away, and the two were left together. The last flush of daylight was fading off the tops of the oak trees, the crickets and the tree-toads
were chirping noisily; while from afar
came the faint bleat of a lamb, or nearer,
the twittering of some restless bird among
the branches.

"I suppose you are weary after your day's work, James," said Miss Emerson, kindly.

"Yes, ma'am," meekly returned Prof.
Jim. He had spent most of this day on his back in the woods, evolving ideas for an article in the "Fall Quarterly."

"And so you have little time for reading, of which Mrs. Wilbor tells me you are very fond?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"What kind of books do you like best, James?"

"Them as has the most in 'em," said
the professor, with an atrocious attempt to fall into a dialect.

"Ah, very true! Did you ever read Froissart's Chronicles?"

James knew that to be in character he had best say no; but he remembered the father of his country, and compromised
by saying: "I've heard it spoken of."

This surprised Miss Emerson; she grew enthusiastic to develop this young man, who seemed to have such an attentive and retentive mind. She went on drawing him out, and finally offered to send home
for some books, which she was sure would interest him. Averse to making her needless trouble, and yet not knowing how to deter her, the professor took from his pocket a pencil and paper, and had the wit to say he could put down their names
and get them from an excellent free library
in the near town.

"Let me see the list, please?" she asked.
"Have you them all rightly named?"
She scanned his writing, wondering how he had spelled all so exactly. "You write like a minister, James—or an editor," she added, with a smile that could not hurt
his feelings; "but such men are seldom plain writers. I could suggest a few changes for the better in your letters;
your t's and l's are alike; your m's and
n's are afled and run out to nothing."

James received these hints with grateful meekness, while Miss Emerson, upon further conversation, was sure he must have a very good "common education."
She wondered, suddenly, if he did not eagerly desire to study Latin. Why he should, it would have puzzled a Philadelphia lawyer to explain, but the young lady from Boston failed to understand how a man could know much and not have this same hunger and thirst; and so she, then and there, proposed to teach him the rudiments.

When Prof. Jim went to bed that night
he felt that he deserved to be hanged;
but he was bound that hanged he would be before he would confess to this sweet-tempered, benevolent girl that he was an imposter. Why he had actually agreed to take his first (?) Latin lesson to-morrow night. For three evenings he avoided
Miss Emerson, and she thought him occupied with work. On the fourth she caught him at leisure, and brought forth an old

"Mrs. Wilbor, who is that man?"
It is needless to say that Mrs. Wilbor had to tell; and if ever two eyes gleamed
with wrath, the two grey orbs pertained
to the Boston lady were the very ones.
She grew every moment more irate.

"Think of it, I teaching a college professor easy Latin out of a primer, and he submitting rather than to have to make my acquaintance. He shall never have that annoyance or fear—never—never again!"

Poor Jim! He was wretched thereafter.

He made every attempt consistent with any sort of dignity, to effect a reconciliation; but she disdained to even answer Mrs. Wilbor, who he implored to act as a mediator.

The time set for her return to Boston
came on apace, and the professor began to pass sleepless nights; but, inexorable
to the last, Miss Emerson refused even to see him.

She chose a day when he had gone
away, and in spite of a threatened storm insisted on going home in the evening train.

She had gone about a half an hour
when he returned, and nothing had so depressed him for years as the fact of her absence. With a look that had more than once told for him in the class-room
the professor mentally vowed she had not done with him yet.

Then, as if fortune succumbed to a love so determined, the boy who had driven to the depot with her came back with the information that he "guessed"
she'd have to sit on the track all night.
He had loitered about the place after the cars left, and ere long a telegram came from the next station. There had been an accident, several persons had been slightly injured—none killed; but the baggage-cars had been demolished, and others overturned and off the track.

Now the scene of this accident was not quite nine miles distant, and in almost as many minutes the professor was well on the road, with the farmer's fleetest horse and carriage. He reached the place without delay, and, surveying the whole,
shivered at the wonderful escape from death.

He passed through group after group of bewildered men and women, some stunned or fainting, some rushing hither and thither. Big drops of rain were falling and the night coming on fast.

The women and children were crowding into the upright cars, and babies were screaming lustily.

He found Miss Emerson, pale and trembling, standing, with her hands still clapsed, apart from the rest. He forgot everything but her escape and her helplessness, and cried out:

"My poor child! How you have been frightened! You are not hurt! Come and let me take your light home!"

She blushed rose-red through her late
pallor, or flushed with anger, and said,
cooly: "I shall do very well here."

"Where!"

"Why, here—until the cars are ready."

"They may not be ready for hours."

"I can wait."

At last a blast of wind nearly tore her shawl from her, and made her stagger to keep her feet.

"But there is a storm coming—you must not. I have a carriage here."

This well-bred young lady was actually
guilty of saying:

"Go home in it, then!"

"I will when I have persuaded you to go also."

Once more she refused, while he urged and finally entreated. The rain increased, the cars were already filled, and her slender form swayed in the wind, and her spirit was as unyielding as ever.

The professor hesitated only a second longer; then gently, but firmly, as if she had been a little girl, he lifted her in his arms, hastened to the carriage, and, springing in beside her, covered her well from the rain, and started for home.

Not one word did she speak; but he did. In college life Prof. Jim had always now he pleaded his own case well, as they drove through the lonesome woods.

very steady hand at farming. He had more than once stopped work and plunged in there among the flickering lights and falling acorns, and showed far more enthusiasm over some tiny bit of vegetation than over the pigs he professed to admire.

That day he was planning a similar slight upon the cornbills which he was hoeing, when—out from a wing of the woods darted a figure, which sped by him on the wind, and left him with two conflicting ideas—was it an escaped lunatic?—was it the farmer's scarecrow, who of a sudden felt its life in every limb? For, beyond him when he turned was the flutter of flying garments streaming from the Atlanta-like figure which fled first here, now there, now toward the creek, as if for a raid upon the cows; now back and off again like a tangent; while ever stretched out before it, and wildly brandished in the air, was a slender wand, ending in a hoop, and a net distended like a balloon.

Ere the astonished professor could draw his breath, the ground was smitten with the wand, the balloon flitted over a distant corn-hill capping it like a bee-hive, and the lunatic sank on her knees before it.

"Professor Jim" strode before it in unmeasured amazement, his whole being one animated interrogation point, he reached the spot, and at the first near glance, would fain have retreated; but it was too late. It was the young lady from Boston. She had seen him, and had marked him for her own. What she was doing was a mystery; but she herself, on closer proximity, was not at all like a scarecrow, whatever might be said of the lunatic question. The puffs and flounces and sashes of her buff morning dress had been adrift on the morning breeze, but now settled about her like a canary bird's ruffled plumage. Her scarlet hooded cape hung from her neck, into which had tumbled her light brown hair, and what could be seen of her face from under a sun-hat the size of a Chinese pagoda was not at all ugly. Cheeks, lips and clear grey eyes were all aglow with eagerness.

"I was determined I'd have him?" she cried, with a glance at Prof. Jim's shirt sleeves. "Such a splendid fellow! I chased him over three stone walls, and around and around the woods. Now I want your help in putting ether to his nose."

A wild fancy shot through the professor's head; that he had so overworked his brain, that dreadful hallucinations were coming upon him. He gasped faintly, "Whose nose?"

The young girl's laugh was like the quick clang of silver bells; then she daintily peeped into the balloon, whispering:

"My beautiful blue butterfly's of course. Now you stay here one moment, Farmer Wilbor won't scold. I'll tell him I hindered you. Hold this ether bottle and bit of cotton, while I take the poor fellow carefully out. Please put your other hand on the stick—steady now! Here he comes! Oh, you beauty, don't flutter so—you break my heart with pity! There now, won't you just hold that cotton quickly to his nose, and it will be over in a moment."

By that time she had the butterfly between her pretty thumb and forefinger, while the professor was applying the ether, very deftly, indeed for a farm-hand.

"You are not a bit clumsy?" she exclaimed. "Dear me! Why don't he die, he struggles so! I thought they rather liked it. My teacher said they first squirmed once and gave up the ghost. Oh, soak the cotton, or I shall let him go!"

"Keep cool," said Prof. Jim. He had started to say in official tones, "Be calm etc.," but remembering his "role," he added: "He'll kick the bucket in about a second."

"He is kicking me and I know he sniffers. I wish I had never caught him! Take the cotton off his nose!" she added

"I suppose you are weary after your day's work, James," said Miss Emerson, kindly.

"Yes, ma'am," meekly returned Prof. Jim. He had spent most of this day on his back in the woods, evolving ideas for an article in the "Fall Quarterly."

"And so you have little time for reading, of which Mrs. Wilbor tells me you are very fond?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"What kind of books do you like best, James?"

"Them as has the most in 'em," said the professor, with an atrocious attempt to fall into a dialect.

"Ah, very true! Did you ever read Froissart's Chronicles?"

James knew that to be in character he had best say no; but he remembered the father of his country, and compromised by saying: "I've heard it spoken of."

This surprised Miss Emerson; she grew enthusiastic to develop this young man, who seemed to have such an attentive and retentive mind. She went on drawing him out, and finally offered to send home for some books, which she was sure would interest him. Averse to making her needless trouble, and yet not knowing how to deter her, the professor took from his pocket a pencil and paper, and had the wit to say he could put down their names and get them from an excellent free library in the near town.

"Let me see the list, please?" she asked. "Have you them all rightly named?" She scanned his writing, wondering how he had spelled all so exactly. "You write like a minister, James—or an editor," she added, with a smile that could not hurt his feelings; "but such men are seldom plain writers. I could suggest a few changes for the better in your letters; your t's and s's are alike; your m's and n's are flat and run out to nothing."

James received these hints with grateful meekness, while Miss Emerson, upon further conversation, was sure he must have a very good "common education." She wondered, suddenly, if he did not eagerly desire to study Latin. Why he should, it would have puzzled a Philadelphia lawyer to explain, but the young lady from Boston failed to understand how a man could know much and not have this same hunger and thirst; and so she, then and there, proposed to teach him the rudiments.

When Prof. Jim went to bed that night he felt that he deserved to be hanged; but he was bound that hanged he would be before he would confess to this sweet-tempered, benevolent girl that he was an imposter. Why he had actually agreed to take his first (!) Latin lesson to-morrow night. For three evenings he avoided Miss Emerson, and she thought him occupied with work. On the fourth she caught him at leisure, and brought forth an old Latin grammar she had found in the garret. He blindly repeated after her every-thing she said, and left her in doubt whether he had the memory of a prodigy or only the tongue of a parrot; he did not "go at the thing like a beginner."

Jim endured it three nights, and could no more. What with playing his part, keeping watch of himself, and seeing her bright eyes bent on him, her white hands fluttering with the dainty handkerchief or clasped in playful and encouraging applause as some forgetful and so remarkably fine effort of his, it was too much.

He engaged Farmer Wilbor to send him into town every night, until Miss Emerson saw that he was not over eager to learn Latin. It was a litter damper on her efforts in behalf of a young man who, as she told Mrs. Wilbor, had "intelligent eyes and an entire absence of coarseness."

She did not talk much to him after that, but amused herself all day long rioting like a happy child among the bees and flowers, following the willow-bordered creek, bringing wonderful rustic treasures from the woods, and, in short, getting the full benefit of an outdoor life.

Miss Emerson used to recline on an old-fashioned sofa, just inside of the cool sit-with the information that he "guessed" she'd have to sit on the track all night. He had loitered about the place after the cars left, and, ere long a telegram came from the next station. There had been an accident, several persons had been slightly injured—none killed; but the baggage-cars had been demolished, and others overturned and off the track.

Now the scene of this accident was not quite nine miles distant, and in almost as many minutes the professor was well on the road, with the farmer's fleetest horse and carriage. He reached the place without delay, and, surveying the whole, shivered at the wonderful escape from death.

He passed through group after group of bewildered men and women, some stunned or fainting, some rushing hither and thither. Big drops of rain were falling and the night coming on fast.

The women and children were crowding into the upright cars, and babies were screaming lustily.

He found Miss Emerson, pale and trembling, standing, with her hands still clasped, apart from the rest. He forgot everything but her escape and her helplessness, and cried out:

"My poor child! How you have been frightened! You are not hurt! Come and let me take your light home!"

She blushed rose-red through her late pallor, or flushed with anger, and said, coolly: "I shall do very well here."

"Where?"

"Why, here—until the cars are ready."

"They may not be ready for hours."

"I can wait."

At last a blast of wind nearly tore her shawl from her, and made her stagger to keep her feet.

"But there is a storm coming—you must not. I have a carriage here."

This well-bred young lady was actually guilty of saying:

"Go home in it, then!"

"I will when I have persuaded you to go also."

Once more she refused, while he urged and finally entreated. The rain increased, the cars were already filled, and her slender form swayed in the wind, and her spirit was as unyielding as ever.

The professor hesitated only a second longer; then gently, but firmly, as if she had been a little girl, he lifted her in his arms, hastened to the carriage, and, springing in beside her, covered her well from the rain, and started for home.

Not one word did she sneak; but he did. In college life Prof. Jim had always been noted for his logical arguments, and now he pleaded his own case well, as they drove through the lonesome woods.

Silence herself could not have remained more mute than that Boston lady. When they were on the last mile, he thought he ought to have melted a stone, and opened the lips of the Sphinx herself. As he helped her from the carriage, he grew desperate, and whispered:

"Will you not tell me, by just one word, if I am forgiven?"

The heart of that young lady, who could not kill a butterfly, relented, and she said, "Yes."

"Jim" was tenderly kissing the little right hand that held the insect when Mrs. Wilbor enlightened the scene with a tall candle, which blew out in the wind.

The next day, however, he did as Dickens' fat boy said, "worse nor that," for Mrs. Wilbor saw him through a crack in the sitting-room door, end a two-hour interview with a kiss, as she told her own spouse, "square on Miss Emerson's lips! Think of that, now!"

"I have thought," said her phlegmatic lord. "That's nothin'. I saw from the first it would be a go!"

A fire was caused in Scranton, the other day, by the sun's rays glancing off a citizen's nose and concentrating on a frame shed. The owner of the nose doesn't belong to a temperance society. He argues that a little wine for the stomach's sake will harm no one.

ting room, and hold sleepy conversations with Mr. Wilbor.

Often James used to sit near by and smoke very good-smelling cigars on the piazza. She surprised him one day reading "Ivanho," which she had dropped there; and, again intent on his mental culture, she encouraged him to read aloud. It was pleasant for her and good for him; so, day after day he read Scott.

Each time when he had ended, and gone away, she had wondered he had read so simply well, she had forgotten the reader; only sometime, looking up she had caught him looking at her so—well, so strangely; it was intensely respectful, but peculiar.

She mused a while, and firmly resolved to cease her efforts in behalf of this young man. She might be making trouble for him. One caught human butterflies, sometimes, when one never thought of chasing. Then, they suffered if you held them tightly, and it was not a legal method of getting rid of them to hold either under their noses until they died.

After this resolution Prof. Jim did not see the young lady for a week. She took her meals at quite irregular hours, and sat no more on the piazza. He was therefore off his guard; and one day peering in the kitchen where Mrs. Wilbor fried potatoes, he fell into the deepest of reveries.

"What are you planning Prof? You have not taken your eyes of the copper tea-kettle for ten minutes."

"My dear sister, I was recalling to mind a line of Virgil—Omnia vincit amor, et nos cedamus amori."

"I know all about it now," said Sarah, who was not a Bostonian, and so did not understand Latin.

Prof. Jim laughed gleefully, and went out. Miss Emerson, who had overheard the unlucky quotation came in.

"Mrs. Wilbor, who is that man?"

It is needless to say that Mrs. Wilbor had to tell; and if ever two eyes gleamed with wrath, the two grey orbs pertaining to the Boston lady were the very ones. She grew every moment more irate.

"Think of it, I teaching a college professor easy Latin out of a primer, and he submitting rather than to have to make my acquaintance. He shall never have that annoyance or fear—never—never again!"

Poor Jim! He was wretched thereafter. He made every attempt consistent with any sort of dignity, to effect a reconciliation; but she disdained to even answer Mrs. Wilbor, who he implored to act as a mediator.

The time set for her return to Boston came on apace, and the professor began to pass sleepless nights; but, inexorable to the last, Miss Emerson refused even to see him.

She chose a day when he had gone away, and in spite of a threatened storm insisted on going home in the evening train.

She had gone about a half an hour when he returned, and nothing had so depressed him for years as the fact of

WAYS AND MEANS.

Why do people write that they "accept with pleasure" an unpleasant invitation, when they really mean that they do so with reluctance?

Why do ladies bid their servants say that they are not at home, when they are engaged or unwilling to see visitors?

Why do actors grumble that the drama is going to the dogs, when they mean that they themselves are not in favor with the public?

Why do men tell their wives that they will be detained by business, when they really mean to be detained by a club dinner?

Why do women bid their husbands escort them to Broadway, when they really mean to make them pay for a new bonnet?

Why do singers speak with diffidence of the powers of their voice, when they mean to swallow greedily all the compliments you give them?

Why do innkeepers often call their country-house a "little place," when they mean to show you a palatial residence?

Why does your friend tell you "any togethery will do," when he means himself to sport a dress suit and white choker?

Why do china dealers name so preposterous a price, when they mean to jump at less than half if they be offered it?

Why do pianists complain that they are sadly out of practice when they are asked to play, while in reality they mean they want more pressing, and they will gladly yield to it?

"NOW IS THE TIME."

Now is the time when all contemplate the approach of the Christmas holidays.

Now is the time when turkeys and geese are beheaded to gratify the palates of us creatures of humanity.

Now is the time when mince pies are considered one of the necessities of household decorations.

Now is the time when juveniles save up their coppers to have a 'big time' at Christmas.

Now is the time when 'Hot Scotch' is taken in as fuel by anti-prohibitionists.

Now is the time when merchants expect a rush of business; and the wise use printer's ink liberally.

Now is the time when single young ladies light a fire in the parlor of evenings and await the coming of their—cousins, of course.

Now is the time when 'The good-by at the door,' is said quickly. The season for 'swinging on the gate' is over.

Now is the time when the average man goes around with some benumbed fingers, while he keeps his gloves warm in his pocket.

Now is the time when 'do-nothings' stand on the sunny side of the street, and smoke bad cigars to keep warm.

Now is the time when young men join the temperance lodge, for the furtherance of the cause—and to see the fair ones home.

Now is the time when the family man uses his spare time in 'fixing up' the house against the approach of King Winter.

SKATING.

FROM CHADWICK AND WALKER.

Up to a period within the past ten years, skating, in this country, was confined to boys and young men, who found time to avail themselves of the favorable condition of the ice ponds, streams, and rivers, in the vicinity of their homes; and to those of the adult population who, on holiday excursions, would include in an hour or two's exercise on skates, provided a snow-storm had not closed up the ponds, and shut them out from all facilities for enjoying the sport. Since the opening of enclosed skating localities, skating has become one of the most popular exercises in vogue—in fact it has passed down into a regular Canadian institution, and one into which both sexes enter with the characteristic spirit and "vim" of our people. Especially have the fair sex become enamored of it. Ten years ago a lady on skates was not only a rare and novel sight in this vicinity, but any fair one, "native and to the manner born," who in such a way would have dared to brave the opinion of 'her set' and to have outraged their sense of feminine propriety by appearing in public on skates, would have been driven forth from the sacred circles of the then fashionable coteries in disgrace. Now the very reverse is the case, for the selfsame fair one is now tabooed as "slow," and not "up to the times" if she can not do the "outside circle" or the "grape-vine twist" on skates in the best style of the art. Now, too, every girl not afflicted with weak ankles, thin or crooked nether limbs, or positive physical inability to exercise herself on skates, is uneasy and dissatisfied unless enjoying herself on the ice. The fact is, however, that Canadian women have been so much excluded from any participation in the out-door amusements and exercises which the European ladies enjoy to such a wholesome extent, that it is not to be wondered at that when the door to such recreation is opened to them, they should rush into ecstasies of delight, or go to extremes in the enjoyment of the too long prohibited pleasure.

SKATING IN A PHYSIOLOGICAL POINT OF VIEW.

The sanitary benefits accruing from skating are considerable, and especially has it, in this respect, been advantageous to the fair sex. The prominent cause of the delicate and sickly constitutions of the majority of our ladies arises from their great neglect of out-door exercise and recreation. Two-thirds of their lives are passed in the artificial and poisonous atmosphere of their furnace-heated and poorly-ventilated apartments. The result is the prevention of the exhalation of carbon and inhalation of oxygen which are of such vital importance to the health of every human being. This requisite action of the lungs in the reception of the life-giving elements of the air we breathe and the expulsion of the refuse carbon from the blood, is never better promoted than when the individual is engaged in the vigorous exercise of skating, and inhaling the oxygen of the pure, frosty air, at the same time bringing into activity every muscle of the body, and giving life to the dormant functions of the skin.

Exercise, to be beneficial, should have the effect of increasing the insensible perspiration, for in the increase of the circulation of the blood to the surface of the body, and the consequent relief given to the over-worked functions of the lungs and bowels, lies the great benefit of exercise. It is from the lack of this circulation of the blood to the surface of the body that people, unaccustomed to out-door exercise, take cold so readily. Those in whom the functions of the skin are in active play know not what a cold is, and hence the hardihood of those constantly in the open air, and actively exercised, in comparison to those engaged in sedentary occupations, and who scarcely know what exercise is. She had gone about a half an hour when he returned, and nothing had so depressed him for years as the fact of her absence. With a look that had more than once told for him in the class-room the professor mentally vowed she had not done with him yet.

Then, as if fortune succumbed to a love so determined, the boy who had driven to the depot with her came back with the information that he "guessed" she'd have to sit on the track all night. He had loitered about the place after the cars left, and ere long a telegram came from the next station. There had been an accident, several persons had been slightly injured—none killed; but the baggage-cars had been demolished, and others overturned and off the track.

She blushed rose-red through her late pallor, or flushed with anger, and said, coolly: "I shall do very well here."

"Where?"

"Why, here—until the cars are ready."

"They may not be ready for hours."

"I can wait."

At last a blast of wind nearly tore her shawl from her, and made her stagger to keep her feet.

"But there is a storm coming—you must not. I have a carriage here."

This well-bred young lady was actually guilty of saying:

"Go home in it, then!"

Once more she refused, while he urged and finally entreated. The rain increased, the cars were already filled, and her slender form swayed in the wind, and her spirit was as unyielding as ever.

The professor hesitated only a second longer; then gently, but firmly, as if she had been a little girl, he lifted her in his arms, hastened to the carriage, and, springing in beside her, covered her well from the rain, and started for home.

Not one word did she speak; but he did. In college life Prof. Jim had always been noted for his logical arguments, and now he pleaded his own case well, as they drove through the lonesome woods.

are of such vital importance to the health of every human being. This requisite action of the lungs in the reception of the life-giving elements of the air we breathe and the expulsion of the refuse carbon from the blood, is never better promoted than when the individual is engaged in the vigorous exercise of skating, and inhaling the oxygen of the pure, frosty air, at the same time bringing into activity every muscle of the body, and giving life to the dormant functions of the skin.

Exercise, to be beneficial, should have the effect of increasing the insensible perspiration, for in the increase of the circulation of the blood to the surface of the body, and the consequent relief given to the over-worked functions of the lungs and bowels, lies the great benefit of exercise. It is from the lack of this circulation of the blood to the surface of the body that people, unaccustomed to out-door exercise, take cold so readily. Those in whom the functions of the skin are in active play know not what a cold is, and hence the hardihood of those constantly in the open air, and actively exercised, in comparison to those engaged in sedentary occupations, and who scarcely know what exercise is. Frequenters of the skating rink, who regularly breathe the pure cold air and make their cheeks ruddy with the newly vitalized blood sent by the exercise to the surface, become proof against colds. It is your housed girls or your office-confined young men who become victims of colds on skating rinks, and those only suffer from careless exposure when warmed up with the sport.

THE MORALITY OF THE SPORT.

The moral aspect of skating is one fully as creditable to the pastime as the picture is from a sanitary point of view. At the skating-rink we meet with friends and acquaintances, not as we meet them in the street, where a passing bow or a minute's converse is all the intercourse we can have with them; nor as at the evening party, where the position of host and guests places them upon a footing wherein the amenities of life are as a matter of course brought into play, and the duties of hospitality call for the devotion of every effort to their enjoyment; nor as at the church or lecture-room, where one's attention is especially devoted to other matters. But we meet them on a footing of equality—except so far as skates are concerned—and where we can converse for a few minutes or an hour; where we can listen and be heard, see and be seen; laugh and frolic without fear of offense; where we can assist those in trouble, meet with and dispense courtesy; in fact, enjoy life for the time being in its heartiest and most sensible way, and at the same time lay up a store of health likely to carry us to an advanced period of life.

SKATING IN ANOTHER LIGHT.

There is one thing which tends to give skating the precedence over any other amusement, and that is the privilege a gentleman enjoys of imparting instruction in the art to his fair companion. To intervene, just at the critical moment, between the departure of one's lady friend from the perpendicular, and her assumption of the horizontal, is to enjoy a combination of duty and pleasure not often within reach, and no relations more calculated to produce tender attachments than that of pupil and tutor under such circumstances. The ice itself suggests that human atoms, under the influence of a low state of the thermometer, should come together like the aqueous particles of the rink, and amalgamate. In fact, the exercise not only brings roses to the cheeks, imparting buoyance to the spirits, and kindly smiles to the mouth, but it weaves nets for Cupid to catch his birds, besides making cages to retain them. So much for skating physiologically and morally considered.

HOW TO SKATE.

Learning to skate is like learning to swim, the success of the learner in both depend greatly upon the amount of confidence with which he becomes inspired. Some will put on a pair of skates, and in a ten minutes' trial will have acquired quite a proficiency; while others, again,

He had loitered about the place after the cars left, and, ere long a telegram came from the next station. There had been an accident, several persons had been slightly injured—none killed; but the baggage-cars had been demolished, and and others overturned and off the track. Now the scene of this accident was not quite nine miles distant, and in almost as many minutes the professor was well on the road, with the farmer's fleetest horse and carriage. He reached the place without delay, and, surveying the whole, shivered at the wonderful escape from death.

He passed through group after group of bewildered men and women, some stunned or fainting, some rushing hither and thither. Big drops of rain were falling and the night coming on fast.

The women and children were crowding into the upright cars, and babies were screaming lustily.

"Will you not tell me, by just one word, if I am forgiven?"

The heart of that young lady, who could not kill a butterfly, relented, and she said, "Yes."

"Jim" was tenderly kissing the little right hand that held the insect when Mrs. Wilbor enlightened the scene with a tallow candle, which blew out in the wind.

The next day, however, he did as Dickens' fat boy said, "worse nor that," for Mrs. Wilbor saw him, through a crack in the sitting-room door, end a two-hour interview with a kiss, as she told her own spouse, "square on Miss Emerson's lips! Think of that, now!"

"I have thought," said her phlegmatic lord. "That's nothin'. I saw from the first it would be a go!"

Learning to skate is like learning to swim, the success of the learner in both depend greatly upon the amount of confidence with which he becomes inspired. Some will put on a pair of skates, and in a ten minutes' trial will have acquired quite a proficiency; while others, again, will take as many hours to get as far as being able to stand steadily on their skates. The prominent cause of this difference is the comparative possession of confidence, and the condition of the learner in regard to the benefits arising from a previous exercise of his muscles—weak ankles and untrained muscles of the legs, retarding the learner considerably.

An important element of success in learning the art, is to have a good pair of skates on when you make your debut on the ice; and this sine qua non will be found in the class of skates fastening to the sole of the boot, without straps to cramp the feet or press on your corns. The boot to which the skate is fastened should, however, be close-fitting, the lace-up Balmoral style being the best for the purpose. One of the best skates in the market is that known as the "New York Club Skate," made by Barney & Berry.

voters that we have, and there is but little machinery to prevent the same person voting several times, or in several places, or of personating other voters who are not present. The ballots, too, are not officially supplied as with us, and there is, consequently, very little guard of secrecy about voting, or guard against fraud. The returning officer is not men holding office for life or good behaviour as with us, they usually hold office during the term of rule of the party to which they belong, and they have, therefore, the strongest inducements to give every official advantage possible to their own party.

In several of the Southern States it is well known that terrorism reigned to a considerable extent. In those counties, where Negro votes were numerous, it is said that not one ballot was cast by them simply because the whole Democrats gave them to understand that if they attempted to vote they might count the cost and fail in the attempt. No doubt there were other counties where the whites are in minority and the same kind of intimidation was used towards them. In Canada where our governmental authority is better recognized and better enforced, and where our whole electoral system is more thoroughly understood, it is found difficult enough to secure a fair election, and we can well understand how it must be with the loose system prevailing among our neighbors. We can well see, too, how undesirable, in practice, is the much lauded system of electing the Chief Magistrate of the nation by a popular vote of the people.

THE ONTARIO ELECTION ACT.

The long protest trial in the County of Lincoln has, at last resulted in the unseating of Mr. Charles Ryckart, both of the judges setting on the case being of the opinion that sufficient corrupt practices had been brought to light in connection with the last election to warrant them in declaring the election void. Some weeks was spent in hearing the appeal in connection with this case, and in the scrutiny of the ballots, and the amount of corrupt practices brought to light in connection with both candidates—Ryckart and Neelon—was truly disgraceful in that it was the second election for that county since the former Parliament was dissolved. At the general election Mr. Neelon, the Reform candidate was declared elected by a slim majority over Mr. Ryckart, and a protest was entered in consequence of which the election was declared void because of corrupt practices. At the second election Ryckart was declared victorious by a majority of a little over twenty, and that, in turn was appealed against because of corruption—an appeal which the judges decided to be well founded. Both have been unseated and both will probably enter again into a contest for the future representation.

The trial has brought more fully to eight than before the defects and advantages of the election law of this Province. Our Provincial law differs from that of the Dominion in the one particular that every ballot is numbered and corresponds with a number entered on the books of the returning officer opposite the name of the voter using it. In case a scrutiny of the votes is deemed necessary, as in the Lincoln case, the ballots may be produced and examined, and fraudulent vote rejected. In this case it turns out that Ryckart, though having a majority of the ballots cast was not proved to have received an actual majority of legal votes. It would certainly be a hardship for the legally elected representative to be deprived of his seat because of bogus voters on the other side. The wisdom of the provision of numbering the ballots seems to Reformers also. It would be the merest affectation to pretend that the balance of intelligence is not on the side of those whose political designation implies all that is liberal, progressive, and beneficial in the broadest sense. And if Reformers come naturally to the front when municipal positions requires to be filled, it is often because they are the best men, and admitted to be so by political opponents as well as adversaries.

But there is no need nor advantage in importing into the municipal council boards the rancour of political strife. A glance at the proceedings of a township council reported in any local paper will show at a glance how little can possibly arise to cause even a division of opinion, to say nothing of political discords; and the very admirable manner in which local affairs are usually conducted is largely owing to men at the council table sinking all political differences and giving their undivided attention to the honest discharge of the duties before them. While, therefore, it is inevitable that Reformers in Ontario will have a preponderating influence in municipal affairs, as they have in the respective Legislatures, the grand object to be kept in view by the electors of both parties should be the return of those who, at the end of their year of office, are likely to give the best account of their stewardship.—Globe

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

It is over five weeks since the balloting took place in the United States for the "Centennial President," and yet, strange to say, the actual result is yet a matter of doubt. The defects of the present system of electing Presidents was never before more clearly demonstrated, and probably the present complications will be the means of securing an amendment to the present system.

The President is not elected directly by the people. There are as many representatives elected as there are members of the two branches of the National Legislature in each state and these, in turn, at a given time, cast their vote for the President. It will be seen, at a glance that an actual majority of the electors is not sufficient to turn the scale of a presidential candidate. In one state the Democratic representatives may be elected by a majority of two hundred thousand, while in another state, equally as populous, an equal number of republicans might have an election by a bare majority of one hundred, and yet in the actual vote for President the last would have an equal vote with the first. It is because of this anomaly that much of the present difficulty arises. There seems to be little doubt but Tilden has a majority, in his favor, of the electors of the nation, but it is yet to be seen whether he has secured a majority of the members of the electoral college.

Then, the system of counting the votes seems very faulty. The ballots in the Southern States are counted by a Board of five men in the State and they have full power to reject such votes, or even the entire ballot of such voting districts as they may see fit. If they rule that in a voting precinct intimidation has been used, or bribery on a large scale has been resorted to, they may reject the entire vote, and their count is final. As their Boards owe their appointment to the party in power, it can be easily seen what strong temptations they have to rule in favor of their own friends, and how open their acts are to the honest suspicion of the people.

since the former Parliament was dissolved. At the general election Mr. Neelon, the Reform candidate was declared elected by a "slim majority over Mr. Ryckart, and a protest was entered in consequence of which the election was declared void because of corrupt practices. At the second election Ryckart was declared victorious by a majority of a little over twenty, and that, in turn was appealed against because of corruption—an appeal which the judges decided to be well founded. Both have been unseated and both will probably enter again into a contest for the future representation.

The trial has brought more fully to light than before the defects and advantages of the election law of this Province. Our Provincial law differs from that of the Dominion in the one particular that every ballot is numbered and corresponds with a number entered on the books of the returning officer opposite the name of the voter using it. In case a scrutiny of the votes is deemed necessary, as in the Lincoln case, the ballots may be produced and examined, and fraudulent vote rejected. In this case it turns out that Ryckart, though having a majority of the ballots cast was not proved to have received an actual majority of legal votes. It would certainly be a hardship for the legally elected representative to be deprived of his seat because of bogus voters on the other side. The wisdom of the provision of numbering the ballots seems to have been well demonstrated.

It would seem, in connection with this case, that better provisions should be made about hastening the result of such trials. In Lincoln some weeks were spent in connection with the hearing of this one case. Two judges sat on the case, and on each side the best lawyers were employed, at great expense, no doubt, so that the costs in the case must be enormous, to some one. Then, a large number of witnesses and others were on hand at an enormous loss to themselves, or cost to their friends. Whether the matter of delay can be remedied, is not so certain, but it is well worth serious consideration. One thing is certain in connection with the new law, and that is that any candidate of any party feels assured that justice may be obtained in any election case, no matter whether friend or opponent of the party in power. Such a state of things did not exist in connection with our former election laws. Thanks to the reform measures of a Reform Government, no party need expect to escape the just penalty of corruption, if guilty.

THE CONTEST IN QUEEN'S.

Mr. Pope's majority in Queen's County was only 85 in a total vote of 6,325. The smallness of the majority in comparison with the large number of votes polled shows that the contest has been an exceedingly close one, and that Mr. Welch made an excellent run. When account is taken of the prominent and influential position Mr. Pope has long occupied in local affairs, and the amount of misrepresentation to which Mr. Laird has ever since he took office been subjected, the result is not so great a victory as some of the Opposition organs would like to make out. The loss of a Cabinet Minister as its representative had, no doubt something to do with turning the scale in a close and uncertain constituency. The smallness of his majority is sufficient to make Mr. Pope's seat very insecure for the general election, and we trust our friends in Queen's will see to it that everything will by that time be ready for a determined effort to win back the metropolitan constituency of the island. It is worthy of remark that it was the city of Charlottetown which elected Mr. Pope, the outlying districts have given nearly 400 majority for his opponent.—Globe.

As their Boards owe their appointment to the party in power, it can be easily seen what strong temptations they have to rule in favor of their own friends, and how open their acts are to the honest suspicion of the people as a whole. The great difficulty in the present case seems to be with these Boards. In several of the Southern States the vote was a close one, and the Boards, by rejecting certain districts, on one side or other, may turn the scale of the entire election. As they have not yet completed their count in some of these states the excitement, as may well be judged, is intense, as the result of the entire election of the nation lies to a large extent in their hands. No matter how fair and conscientious they may be they will be blamed by one party; and on the other hand, how unjust they may act there is little remedy from their rulings.

Even after the result of the direct vote of the people may have been decided the whole agony is not over. The representatives whom the people have always voted for President for the candidate of their party, but there is nothing to compel them to do so. When the result is so doubtful as it now is no doubt very strong inducements may be held out to some of the more shaky ones to vote for the other side, and it may be that half a dozen so changing may turn the scale for the nation. It is already stated that some of these men are being tampered with. Then, because of legal technicalities some of them may be found ineligible to act, and as many as can be ruled off in this way much weakens the party, and strong efforts are now being made in that direction by both sides, much intensifying the great excitement.

The system for balloting is also very defective, being much looser and less guarded than our own. There is universal suffrage, and not the same efficient system of the previous registration of

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS AND POLITICS.

In a recent issue of the Opposition organ in this city appeared a letter from a correspondent, who affected to be more or less alarmed and indignant at what he alleged to be the determination of Reformers to promote political objects by securing the return of their friends at the forthcoming municipal elections. It must be a sweetly innocent Conservative indeed who saw anything strange in such a proceeding. For not only have the Conservatives, as a rule, resisted all attempts to divest municipal contests of a party character, but it was only the other day that one of their most active agents was going through the county openly calling upon the faithful to secure majorities in the Municipal Councils at the first step towards success at the Provincial or Dominion elections.

But it is useless in matters of this kind to indulge in mere recriminations. The duty of Reformers, as well as Conservatives, is to see that the men best fitted for the office to be filled are elected. It is not in the public interest, but quite the reverse, that anyone should be entrusted with the control of municipal affairs who, being otherwise unsuitable, happens to belong to a particular political party. No temporary political advantage can compensate for placing the duty of municipal government in the hands of unworthy persons. If for no other reason than that the election of persons of a low moral or intellectual stamp disgusts men of better standing with the administration of municipal affairs, and discourages them from taking the part they ought in the discharge of the duties of citizenship, such errors should be avoided. The elevation of municipal office in the eyes of the public can only be secured by the selection of those who are worthy of respect and in whom their fellow-citizens have the highest confidence.

It is not, of course, strange that the Reform party being the largest, the majority of eligible candidates should be

Reformers also. It would be the merest affectation to pretend that the balance of intelligence is not on the side of those whose political designation implies all that is liberal, progressive, and beneficial in the broadest sense. And if Reformers come naturally to the front when municipal positions require to be filled, it is often because they are the best men, and admitted to be so by political opponents as well as adversaries.

But there is no need nor advantage in importing into the municipal council boards the rancour of political strife. A glance at the proceedings of a township council reported in any local paper will show at a glance how little can possibly arise to cause even a division of opinion, to say nothing of political discords; and the very admirable manner in which local affairs are usually conducted is largely owing to men at the council table sinking all political differences and giving their undivided attention to the honest discharge of the duties before them. While, therefore, it is inevitable that Reformers in Ontario will have a preponderating influence in municipal affairs, as they have in the respective Legislatures, the grand object to be kept in view by the electors of both parties should be the return of those who, at the end of their year of office, are likely to give the best account of their stewardship. —Globe

The meeting called for the purpose of organizing an "Education Society for Eastern Ontario," has been held at Ottawa, and appears to have been quite successful. There were present about 100 teachers, 60 of whom were enrolled as members. A constitution was adopted, and the following officers were chosen:—President, J. McMillan, B. A.; 1st V. P.; H. L. Slack, M. A.; 2nd V. P.; P. C. McGregor, B. A.; 3rd V. P. M. A. Smirle; Recording Secretary, Mr. Parlow; Corresponding Secretary, W. R. Riddell, B. A.; Treasurer, Rev. T. D. Phillips, M. A cable despatch from London announces the death of the Rev. George Dawson, the well-known popular lecturer, whose visit to this country last year will be fresh in the minds of many. Mr. Dawson was born in London in 1821, and was educated for the Baptist ministry. He completed his course of study at Glasgow, where he graduated M. A., and shortly after was appointed to the charge of a chapel in Birmingham. His connection with this congregation was not, however, of long duration, a difference having arisen among his people as to certain peculiarities in their pastor's ministrations, and notably to a disregard of the pure conventionalities of his office. A secession took place in consequence, Mr. Dawson being followed by the larger portion of his flock who at once commenced the erection of a new chapel, which was opened in 1874. But it was rather as a lecturer than as a preacher that Mr. Dawson made his reputation outside of the circle that gathered around his ministry. He was also for a considerable time connected with the press, having at one time been the principal proprietor of the Birmingham Daily Press, and later on, having assumed the editorial management of the Birmingham Morning News, a Liberal daily which made its first appearance in 1871.

A DESPERATE ENCOUNTER.

A RELIGIOUS MANIAC'S VAGARIES—SAVAGE ATTACK ON HIS WIFE AND SON.

About four miles from this place, (says the Markdale, Ont., Expositor) in the 10th concession of Glenelg, there has lived for the past two years, a quiet respectable farmer, named John Buchanan. He was rather too quiet a disposition; was exemplary in his moral character, of a religious turn of mind, and a regular attendant at divine worship. Some time ago he attended several revival meetings that were held in this neighborhood, and it appears the excitement was more than his weak intellect could bear, and he became deranged, but until recently his derangement did not assume a dangerous form. Last week, however, he grew worse, and on Thursday last acted so strangely, that some neighbors who were helping Buchanan's step-son to kill a bullock and weigh hay, remained to watch him through the night. Some time during the night Buchanan requested those sitting with him to tie him, as he was afraid he'd do harm to some one, and his request was complied with—his hands and feet securely tied. In the morning the watchers started for their homes, but had not gone far, when the unfortunate man requested his

There is but little change to note in the situation at the South Carolina State capital. The Democratic Legislature has withdrawn from the State House to its old quarters at the Carolina House. Both Houses are in secret session, and fears are entertained of a disturbance, and possibly of bloodshed. In Louisiana there is also nothing new to report. The result of the canvass is not yet made known, and it is not likely that the completion of the electoral vote will be completed before this afternoon. Great excitement exists in Nebraska over the movement of the Democrats in petitioning for an injunction restraining the Republican electors from casting their votes. The latter will make an effort to take the matter before the Supreme Court of the State.

In the morning the watchers started for their homes, but had not gone far, when the unfortunate man requested his step-son to release him, and as he appeared more rational, his request was complied with, and the boy's kindness in releasing his stepfather nearly brought him his death. Shortly after this Buchanan took a spade and started off to kill the pigs, when the boy interfered and received from his father a blow on the head with the spade. The boy then grabbed the spade and succeeded in taking from his father, but no sooner did Buchanan lose the spade than he made a race for a butcher knife that was lying on a log of the barn; the boy also ran and both grabbed the knife. A desperate struggle between father and son for the possession of the knife ensued, but Buchanan succeeded in getting the knife by the handle and drawing the blade through the boy's hand, cutting him very badly, then stabbed him in the side. By this time Mrs. Buchanan came to her son's assistance, when her mad husband rushed upon her and stabbed her several times on the head and face, and was only prevented from killing her by the knocking him down with the spade. The neighbors who had been with Buchanan through the night, heard the cries of the woman and her son, and went to their assistance, and Buchanan was secured so that he could do no further harm. On Saturday he was brought to town and examined before Wm. Brown, Esq., J. P., who committed him to Owen Sound jail.

able despatch from London announces the death of the Rev. George Dawson, the well-known popular lecturer, who visited this country last year with much success in the minds of many. Mr. Dawson was born in London in 1821, and was educated for the Baptist ministry. He completed his course of study at Glasgow, where he graduated M.A., and shortly after was appointed to the charge of a chapel in Nottingham. His connection with this congregation was not, however, of long duration, a difference having arisen between him and his people as to certain peculiarities of their pastor's ministrations, and in consequence, Mr. Dawson being expelled by the larger portion of his flock. He once commenced the erection of a chapel, which was opened in 1874. He was rather a lecturer than a minister, and Mr. Dawson made his reputation outside of the circle that gathered around his ministry. He was also for a considerable time connected with the having at one time been the principal editor of the Birmingham Daily Press, and on having assumed the editorial management of the Birmingham Morning News, a Liberal daily which made its first appearance in 1871.

A DESPERATE ENCOUNTER.
RELIGIOUS MANIAC'S VAGARIES—SAVAGE ATTACK ON HIS WIFE AND SON.

About four miles from this place, (says he Markdale, Ont., Expositor.) in the 6th concession of Glenelg, there has lived for the past two years, a quiet respectable farmer, named John Buchanan. He was rather too quiet a disposition; as exemplary in his moral character, of religious turn of mind, and a regular attendant at divine worship. Some time ago he attended several revival meetings that were held in this neighborhood, and it appears the excitement was more than his weak intellect could bear, and he became deranged, but until recently his derangement did not assume a dangerous form. Last week, however, he grew worse, and on Thursday last acted so strangely, that some neighbors who were helping Buchanan's step-son to kill a bullock and weigh hay, remained to watch him through the night. Some time during the night Buchanan requested those sitting with him to tie him, as he was afraid he'd do harm to some one, and his request was complied with—his hands and feet securely tied. In the morning the watchers started for their homes, but had not gone far, when the unfortunate man requested his step-son to release him, and as he appeared more rational, his request was complied with, and the boy's kindness in releasing is stepfather nearly brought him his path. Shortly after this Buchanan took a spade and started off to kill the pigs, when the boy interfered and received from his father a blow on the head with the spade. The boy then grabbed the spade and succeeded in taking from his father, but no sooner did Buchanan see the spade than he made a race for a butcher knife that was lying on a log of the barn; the boy also ran and both grabbed the knife. A desperate struggle between father and son for the possession of the knife ensued, but Buchanan succeeded in getting the knife by the handle and drawing the blade through the boy's head, cutting him very badly, then striding him in the side. By this time Mrs. Buchanan came to her son's assistance, when her mad husband rushed upon her and stabbed her several times on the head and face, and was only prevented from killing her by the knocking him down with the spade. The neighbors who had been with Buchanan through the night, heard the cries of the woman and her son, and went to their assistance, and Buchanan was secured so that he could do no further harm. On Saturday he was brought to town and examined before Wm. Brown, Esq., J. P., who committed him to Owen Sound jail.

At the meeting held in the Town Hall on Tuesday night for the purpose of making arrangements to have penny readings in aid of the poor of Napanee it was decided to give the first concert in the Town Hall next Monday night, by the Choral Union of which further particulars and due notice will soon be given. Mayor Williams, with his usual discernment, is looking after the interests of the poor in anticipation of the coming hard winter.

December Fair.

A large crowd of people attended the fair on Tuesday. The show of cattle was very good, but we cannot say so much for the horses except that most of them made a good show of ribs, and considerable trading in horse—bones was the result. Whiskey drinking was freely indulged in. But strange to say there was little or no fighting, and no arrests worth noting.

Vennor's Prophecy for December.

Vennor gives the following forecast of the weather for the month of December:—There is every prospect of December being a very stormy and wintry month, and particularly a blustery one. Last year we had no sleighing at all during the month. This year we shall, in all probability have sleighing throughout. There will most likely be a great deal of snow and a severe cold snap.

A Convict Escapes.

It is reported that as the train which was carrying prisoners from the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary to that at Kingston, was nearing Kingston station, one of the number escaped by jumping through the window of the car, as it was going at a rapid rate. The train was stopped, and search made for the desperate rascal, but without finding him.

Mr. Bolton.

Mr. Bolton, the Reform Candidate for Cardwell, is a man of unblemished reputation, and stands very highly in the estimation of all who know him. He was defeated in that riding by the late J. H. Cameron in 1872. Mr. Bolton is a man of unusually good abilities, a good speaker and just the man for a good representative. We hope he will be elected.

War of Words.

Considerable chaff was indulged in by some of our town fathers, at the last meeting of the Council, when the question was brought up, of remuneration to the town for damage done to the streets, by the Gas contractor in laying down the mains. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." If something of this kind did not occasionally occur, the meetings would be rather monotonous to an outsider, unless he had an axe to grind, and a special arrangement made with some councillor to turn the municipal crank.

Hissed.

The people of the city of Montreal don't fancy the idea of anything in the shape of annexation. Hilton during his lecture on Friday last in that city, was hissed when alluding to a union between the United States and Canada. The more we see of the Great Republic the less we find to admire in that form of Government. The machine is either becoming too unwieldy to handle, or it misses the honest men who first established it. Mob rule,—love of the dollar,—and want of patriotism, will cause its dismemberment soon. No nation in the world has as black a political record to show, as the American Republic.

We have received the first number of this beautifully got up Illustrated History of Canada, published by Hase, Rigby & Co., Montreal, for Mr. Charles R. A BIGAMIST ON HIS TRAVELS.

A FORMER LONDONER TOO UNANIMOUSLY MARRIED—ONE WIFE IN HAMILTON, ANOTHER IN BEAMSVILLE.

The Hamilton Times tells the following story concerning the bigamous practices of a man who at one time carried business in this city, and who signals his career here by proving himself a deceiver: Some three years ago a young man named Edward Capelle, son of a respected clergyman of Hamilton, discharged from the employ of Messrs Sanford, Vail & Bickley, for various reasons. Though quite young in years he was not inexperienced in ways that are dark. He married a respectable young girl of the name of Presnall, who is at present living with her father in city. After leaving Messrs. Sanford Vail & Bickley he travelled for Mr. Capelle for a short time. After this he was not much heard of but eventually turned up in Perth, and after that was heard at the back of the Mountain in the direction of Caledonia: where he gave him out to be a teacher of music, and gave lessons to the daughters of the farmer in the neighborhood. While there he was arrested for obtaining money under false pretences, but the matter was settled. Kapelle gave out that his name was Wilson, and that his father was a clergyman in the States, and by this means obtained money from several clergymen. A days ago a gentleman in the city received a letter from Beamsville asking him to person named Edward Wilson, who gave himself out to be a brother-in-law of the deceased, and was given a genuine. On enquiry being made Mr. Bickley denied all knowledge of such a person and could not imagine who it could be. Yesterday, however, the mystery was cleared up. A gentleman from Beamsville happened to call upon the firm business, and enquired if they had a traveller named Edward Wilson: he said "no," and enquired the reason for asking. The gentleman then told them that a person giving the name, stating that he was a traveller of the firm, had been married at Beamsville and had invited him to a champagne supper the night previous, to which he was unable to go. He gave a description of the young man, and he was at once recognized by Mr. Bickley as Ed Kapelle. He had been visiting Beamsville every Saturday for the last weeks, and had ultimately married a respectable young lady there, whose name we withhold at present. The astonishment of the gentleman was when he was informed that Kapelle Wilson had a wife in Hamilton. The father of the unfortunate first Mrs. Kapelle was communicated with, and his story, no doubt was left of Wilson Kapelle. He said that lately some people had called at his house, asking Mr. Wilson, which name he believed Kapelle was giving. He knew also he was in the habit of going frequently to Beamsville, as he had told his wife was giving music lessons there. Presnall started for Beamsville last night, but whether he succeeded in finding the bigamist or not is at present known.

becoming more interested, I wrote you, thinking it useless to purchase any of the medicines before stating my case to you fully. Your reply gave me so much encouragement that I commenced the use of your Favorite Prescription. Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets, according to the printed directions accompanying them. Their effect upon me, and the struggle to rid my system of those poisonous drugs, was indeed wonderful. Some of the time my body has been completely covered with a rash. I can eat and sleep well; walked to church yesterday morning, besides a block in the afternoon, without any supporter, and I consider myself almost entirely well.

Don't Know What to Do.—We sometimes hear persons say, "my horse is sadly out of condition, and I cannot tell either what is the matter with him, or how to get him into better order;" they appear to be ignorant of the fact that there is withing their reach a remedy safe, sure, and effectual in all cases. Many persons who deal in horses use large quantities of it, and testify that its effects are most satisfactory. One horse dealer informs us that his horse's condition and appearance are so much improved by its use that they sell more readily and for higher prices. The article is "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy." Nothing else is equal to it for the same purpose. Remember the name and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Thousands of people are now carelessly allowing themselves to drift through the preliminary symptoms of consumption, under the fatal delusion that they are troubled with nothing but a "slight cold." How necessary is it, then, that a cold should be cared for from its incipency, and every exertion used to get rid of it. "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" will stop the hacking cough in a few minutes and by their influence on the bronchial and pulmonary organs all fears of dangerous results will soon be dissipated—but they must be taken in time. A BIGAMIST ON HIS TRAVELS.
A FORMER LONDONER TOO UNANIMOUSLY
MARRIED—ONE WIFE IN HAMILTON—
ANOTHER IN BEAMSVILLE.

The Hamilton Times tells the following story concerning the bigamous practice of a man who at one time carried on business in this city, and who signalled
his career here by proving himself a deadbeat: Some three years ago a young man named Edward Kapelle, son of a respected clergyman of Hamilton, was discharged from the employ of Messrs.
Sanford, Vail & Bickley, for various reasons. Though quite young in years he was not inexperienced in ways that are dark. He married a respectable young girl of the name of Presnall, who is at present living with her father in the city. After leaving Messrs. Sanford, Vail & Bickley he travelled for Mr. Chilman for a short time. After this he was not much heard of but eventually turned up in Perth, and after that was heard of
at the back of the Mountain in the direction of Caledonia: where he gave himself out to be a teacher of music, and gave lessons to the daughters of the farmers in the neighborhood. While there he was arrested for obtaining money under false
pretences, but the matter was settled.
Kapelle gave out that his name was Wilson and that his father was a clergyman
in the States, and by this means obtained money from several clergymen. A few days ago a gentleman in the city received a letter from Beamsville asking him if a person named Edward Wilson, who gave himself out to be a brother-in-law of his, was genuine. On enquiry being made Mr. Bickley denied all knowledge of such a person,
and could not imagine who it could be.
Yesterday, however, the mystery was cleared up. A gentleman from Beams-ville happened to call upon the firm on business, and enquired if they had a traveller named Edward Wilson: they said "no," and enquired the reason for asking. The gentleman then told them that a person giving the name, and stating that he was a traveller of the firm, had been married at Beamsville,
and had invited him to a champagne
supper the night previous, to which he was unable to go. He gave a description of the young man, and he was at once recognized by Mr. Bickley as Edward Kapelle. He had been visiting Beams-ville every Saturday for the last five weeks, and had ultimately married a respectable young lady there, whose name we withheld at present. The astonishment of the gentleman was great
when he was informed that Kapelle et alis Wilson had a wife in Hamilton. The father of the unfortunate first Mrs. Ka-pelle was communicated with, and from his story, no doubt was left of Wilson being Kapelle. He said that lately several people had called at his house, asking for
Mr. Wilson, which name he believed Kapelle was giving. He knew also that he was in the habit of going frequently to Beamsville, as he had told his wife he was giving music lessons there. Mr.
Presnall started for Beamsville last evening, but whether he succeeded in catching the bigamist or not is at present unknown.

YACHTING.
The Countess of Dufferin still remains unsold, and Major Gifford, it is understood, is likely to be a heavy loser by his spirited undertaking to whip the champion yacht of the New York Club. If properly sailed and trimmed, the best American authorities agree that the Countess could next year give them very serious trouble. Under these circumstances we are not surprised to hear that several gentlemen have it in contemplation to buy and equip the Countess for what is sure to turn out a more success-

...they must be taken in time. Sold

cents per box.

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT! A FEW FACTS
FOR THE PEOPLE.—There are but few preparations of medicines which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time.
One of these is Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Read the following and be convinced:—Thos. Robinson, Farnham Centre, P. Q., writes, "I have been afflicted with rheumatism for the last ten years, and have tried many remedies without any relief, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, and since then have had no attack of it. I would recommend it to all."—J. H. Earl, Hotel Keeper, West Shefford, P. Q., writes, "I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr.
Thomas' Electric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect.
No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horses in cases of cuts,
wounds, etc., and think it is equally as good for horse as for man."—A. Maybee, Merchant, Warkworth, writes,
"I have sold some hundreds of bottles
of Electric Oil, and it is pronounced
by the public, one of the best medicines
they have ever used; it has done wonders in healing and relieving pain, sore throats, etc., and is worthy of the greatest confidence."—Joseph Rusan, Township Percy, writes, "I was persuaded to try Thomas' Electric Oil for a lame knee which troubled me for three or four years, and I never found anything like it for curing lameness. It is great public benefit."—A. M. Hamilton, Warkworth, writes, "For weeks
I was troubled with a swelled ankle,
which annoyed me very much. Mr.

The new C. M. Church at Gretna, on the Morven and Port Circuit, will be opened on the 1st inst., in the afternoon, by a sermon from the Rev. James Elliott, ex-President of the Montreal Conference, following the dedicatory services, in which will be joined by several ministers. A tea meeting will be held in the evening, at which addresses will be given by the above Rev. Gentleman, other able ministers. Services on following Sabbath will be preached, during which further notice will be given.

Mathematical Master.
The session of the School Board, on Tuesday evening last, out of forty applicants, many of them from excellent teachers, the Board selected Mr. William B. A., of Applied Science, McUniversity, Montreal. Mr. Chipman's rank as a mathematician and scientist, is probably the most brilliant of student of McGill, as he obtained year in graduating, no less than first classes, besides a special certificate of merit. He has also had experience as a public school teacher, and is recommended as a teacher. We are glad to learn that the staff of the school is to be so ably sustained, wish Mr. Chipman the highest success in his new sphere.

Meeting.
The Soiree in the Presbyterian Church Wednesday evening, was a grand success. The tables in the basement of the church, where the edibles were provided, were filled twice, and everyone partook of good things furnished in a hearty manner. After the edibles were disposed of, all adjourned to the main body of the church to hear the speeches. The room was occupied by the Rev. Mr. Agnew, our resident minister. Mr. Blackstock, the C. M. Minister, Mr. Burton, of Thomas Street Presbyterian Church, Belleville, and Mr. M. McLean, of St. James Church, Belleville, an array of it such as is seldom brought together in time. Mr. Young, after some appropriate remarks introduced, Rev. Mr. Brown who gave what he called his General speech, which contained an immense amount of information, and was well received with marked interest. How managed to encompass so much in a short space of time, was really astonishing. The Rev. Mr. McLean, addressed the meeting in that logical, plain, and forcible manner, that always has a deep impression on the minds of hearers, and causes his addresses to be universally appreciated and admired never and wherever delivered. The Rev. Mr. Blackstock next came forward spoke to the audience for some time in a plain manner for which he is noted, engaged the attention of the audience in well chosen timely remarks.

A LADY SPEEDILY CURED.—by Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, after being under medical treatment for two years, which left her in an emaciated and very feeble condition, with terrible suffering from pain, and all hope of recovery gone, writes:

Rome, N. Y., June 15, 1875.
Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:
I feel it my duty to express my gratitude to you and the Divine Power that assisted you in the study and acquirement of means to relieve suffering. When I commenced the use of your medicines I was in a rapid decline. I had been under medical treatment for nearly two years—had been obliged to wear an internal supporter most of the time for four or five years, and for six or seven months previous to commencing the use of your medicines I suffered intense pain almost constantly, nothing giving me even momentary relief (much of the time) except opium or morphine, the action of my stomach and liver being almost destroyed by their use. I was rapidly growing weaker, losing in flesh, and could take no nourishment, save a little beef-tea or gruel, could sit up but a few minutes at a time, could not walk across the room, and had formed the opinion that nothing could help me, but that I must soon leave my little children and family. In the midst of my despondency, one of your circulars was brought into my room. I paid little attention to it, thinking little of patent medicines, and supposing yours were such; but, after throwing it aside, I was impressed to look at it again, and,

WHAT THEY SAY OF IT! A FEW FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.—There are but few preparations of medicines which have stood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Read the following and be convinced:—Thos. Robinson, Farnham Centre, P. Q., writes, "I have been afflicted with rheumatism or I. E. 25 years, and have tried many remedies without any relief, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, and since then have had no attack of it. I would commend it to all."—J. H. Earl, Hotel Keeper, West Sheffield, P. Q., writes, "I have been troubled with a severe complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horses in cases of cuts, wounds, etc., and think it is equally as good for horse as for man."—A. Maybee, Merchant, Warkworth, writes, "I have sold some hundreds of bottles of Electric Oil, and it is pronounced by the public, one of the best medicines they have ever used; it has done wonders in healing and relieving pain, sore throats, etc., and is worthy of the greatest confidence."—Joseph Rusan, Township Percy, writes, "I was persuaded to try Thomas' Electric Oil for a lame knee which troubled me for three or four years, and I never found anything like it for curing lameness. It is a great public benefit."—A. M. Hamilton, Warkworth, writes, "For weeks I was troubled with a swelled ankle, which annoyed me very much. Mr. Maybee of this place induced me to try Electric Oil, and before one bottle was used I was cured. It is a most remarkable medicine. Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25cts. S. N. FEEDING DAIRY STOCK IN WINTER.

Mr. Willard, of the Rural New-Yorker, answers as follows some questions on this subject from an Illinois correspondent:

In comparing roots with other kinds of cattle food, like corn, bran, etc., we get better results, practically, from the roots than from any other kind of food. That is to say, a bushel of roots—though containing a lower percentage of nutritive element than a bushel of corn—may be so fed in connection with the corn as to give as good results as when the same quantity of corn is fed in place of the roots. This may seem an extraordinary statement to one who consults the tables of analysis of grains and roots for the latter, it will be seen, contain a large proportion of water in their composition, but from numerous experiments at the manger, the roots always show a better result than their analysis would seem to indicate. Livery men tell us that horses will do more work, have a sleeker coat, and be healthier when carrots are fed in connection with oats; and that three bushels of oats and one of carrots are better in their results than four bushels of oats.

Roots assist digestion and promote a more thorough assimilation of other foods. They improve the health of stock in winter when dry foods are the chief dependence and as the improved health of stock is an important element in dairy management, the dairyman will find it of advantage to grow roots for his stock. In New-York, the expense of growing turnips and mangolds is from 6 to 8c. per bushel. They ought to be grown much cheaper in Illinois, because the soil is easier worked, and is generally better adapted to root culture than most of the land in New-York. Our most successful dairymen are of the opinion that it pays well to raise roots for dairy stock, and we are quite certain it will pay to grow them in Illinois, even at the comparatively low price named for corn and bran. Roots promote a flow of milk, and as a spring ration for "cows in milk," if fed in connection with corn meal and bran, they will be found of very great advantage.

Corn meal, when fed alone, is not the best kind of food for cows in milk. It is of a too heating nature, and when fed in considerable quantities, is apt to derange health, inducing garget and other disorders. Dairy stock is often very much injured by injudicious feeding with this kind of food. If a liberal supply of roots is used in connection with corn meal, the diet will be improved, resulting in a more generous supply of milk and better health of stock.

Of the different kinds of roots usually raised for cattle, we find, on the whole, the best results are obtained from the yellow globe mangold. The mangold is an excellent keeper, and is, therefore, available late in spring. It gives no bad taste to the milk—an objection which is often urged against turnips; it grows well in a variety of soils; is not liable to attacks from all those insects; it is easily harvested, and from all these good qualities we should give it the preference. The parsnip makes excellent milk, but it is not so easily grown as the turnip or mangold.

When hay and grain are scarce and at high price, it may pay to steam or cook the food of stock; but at the rate named and cost of labor, we should say decidedly that it would not pay. Where considerable quantities of straw are to be utilized—if it be cut and mingled with meal and bran and the whole then steamed—it furnishes a good ration for stock, and when fodder of all kinds is expensive, quite a saving is not unfrequently made. But, at the low price named for corn and bran, the cost of preparing the steamed ration would more than counterbalance the amount saved in feed.

WINTERING BEES.

The beginner in bee-keeping may be truly told that nine-tenths of all his losses, vexations, and troubles will come in the winter season, in a northern climate. No matter how bees are wintered—on their summer stands, in winter bee-houses, or in cellars—there will surely be losses, sometimes light and sometime heavy. Apiarists have studied this subject in all of its phases for many years, but no one has been able to discover or invent any method of wintering that is sure to enable bees to come out safely in the spring. Nor will it be possible ever to discover such a method, I think, owing to the following facts:

1. Severe cold weather causes bees to die when they are unable to change their position in the hive to reach their honey. They starve with an abundance of honey in another part of the hive.

2. Death by having lived their allotted time. Bees only live six months generally; and when put into winter quarters in November or December, unless the hives contain many young bees, they will, in many cases, be found in the spring with but few live bees in them; and they gradually disappear frequently, when they begin to forage in the fields, many becoming chilled and unable to return to their hives.

3. Diseases; diseased brood partially causes breeding to cease, and such families stand a poor chance of wintering safely. They are also affected sometimes with disease called dysentery—an immoderate discharge of their feces, and this destroys many families of bees, so that taking these conditions into consideration it is not possible for any bee-keeper to winter his bees without loss every season.

The question then is, how can we winter our bees with the least loss? It would seem that scientific bee-keepers, after half a century spent in investigating the difficulties of wintering bees, might have decided on some uniform place of wintering them, especially in the same climate; but they have not, and we find in our bee-publications a great diversity of opinion existing, some advocating wintering on the summer stands, some in winter bee-houses, and others in various ways; but the three methods I have named I consider the only ones worthy of special notice.—Country Gentleman.

OPEN FIRES.

It is just about this time of the year that mothers begin to find one and another of the household sicken more or less. Baby's digestive organs are out of order, papa has a low fever, and the little girls seem emulating mamma as to the back-ache, while, worst of all, one or two of the family have "chills." There is a remedy for all this, and, unless the chills are unmistakable, it is not quinine. It is simple to take out the square fireboard in your sitting-room, if you are blessed in having an old-fashioned house, and, on the bricks, lighting each morning and evening a few sticks of wood; or, lacking the open fire place, kindle the wood in the grate. You are not chilly yet, and the middle of the day is quite warm.

Nearly all those who had bets at Morrissey's gambling rooms have withdrawn them, under a decision that they could be annulled by mutual consent, Morrissey retaining his commissions.

A cablegram from London says the Canadian loan issued by Hon. Mr. Cartwright, Minister of Finance, has been completely successful. The amount asked for has been subscribed three times over.

Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday schools, is to have a national memorial dedicated to his memory in Gloucester Cathedral, Gloucester being the city in which he was born, lived, and worked.

The total receipts at the Centennial from all sources from May 10 to November 10 are stated as follows: From admission fees, $3,813,725; from concessions, $290,000; percentages and royalties, $205,010; total, $4,308,735.

For the younger children you should also provide warmer clothing in the early mornings. I grant you it is a little troublesome to have to put Tot's woollen stockings and a warm dress on till ten and then change for the noontime; but ten minutes a day will save you great anxiety and doctor's bills. Another thing about a little open fire at night: the room where it is grows wonderfully attractive; instead of your little ones staying out doors in the damp, which comes so insidiously that it is not felt till its fatal work is done, they will get their chairs and sit around the fire to play the Guessing Game, or listen to a story, or sing songs.

"Forty-two years ago," said he
—that is my wife here and I—panied by my poor aged and vi-father, approached Quebec after age of nine weeks on the Atlantic alas! not to land, as we had so long so fondly hoped. In those days, a little interest was taken in sanita-
re arrangements; certainly not the precedents which are now so common. Our was crowded with emigrants, many whom, like ourselves, had not properly advised as to the coun-ought to pursue. To make a long short, cholera, the fearful, malic-black pestilence, broke out among
and for many days we had a wild on board. But it is astonishing what human mind is capable of en-
through usage. The horrible fear first overpowered us all soon gave a quiet, serene calmness, at
as I often thought, amounting to ference, as hour by hour, and day by
we saw our passengers and companying around us and carried up a night to be wound in the long sheets and buried in the deep.
God, we ourselves escaped the con-
and something like joy filled our
as we began to approach the capital, but 'Quarantine' Quar-
was now the cry that reached us
those on shore, and back to quar-
we were sent for sixty days.

"You will excuse me, sir," con-
the old man, as he approached this
of his tale, for the tears began to freely down his aged cheeks, "you excuse me, sir, if the recollections experience still affected me sadly
my lonesome, aged, and sainted
there found his grave, and oh! sir
a grave! and such a burial! He had attacked before we were a week
island, and, knowing the rough usage to which all the other unforvictims had been subjected, we so
first to conceal his case from the su-
and treat him ourselves—for we a-
been supplied with remedies of our or another." But his symptoms be-more alarming; we had to apply
and no sooner did the doctor arrive
the poor, pleading patient was in-ately carried out of sight into the
tal. This was perhaps right, sir—
I have no doubt, for several reasons
it was; but it seemed hard, sir, to hands willing to minister to his
should be denied access to him.
were not allowed to see him again
could even our enquires after his be satisfactorily answered. The
was too busy, and his assistants
not nor seemed to care to whom reference when we made our ap-them. At length, after ten days of nizing suspense which I could not control, I one day became almost in my behavior, and watching an-
tunity, rushed into the hospital,
mined to see my father dead or even should I be forced to use violence. Fortunately for me, the demic had by this time spread so that all on the island, both in and of hospital, seemed to wander about state of semi-despair. Even the dants inside were so much affected
my conduct passed unnoticed, and

CATARRH!
Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.
MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual droppings in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely to God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy.
Yours truly HENRY NIDER,

victims had been subjected, we sought a first to conceal his case from the surgeon and treat him ourselves—for we all had been supplied with remedies of one kind or another. But his symptoms became more alarming; we had to apply for aid and no sooner did the doctor arrive than the poor, pleading patient was immediately carried out of sight into the hospital. This was perhaps right, sir,—indeed I have no doubt, for several reasons, but it was; but it seemed hard, sir, the hands willing to minister to his comfort should be denied access to him. We were not allowed to see him again, we could even our enquires after his welfare be satisfactorily answered. The doctor was too busy, and his assistants knew not nor seemed to care to whom we had reference when we made our appeal to them. At length, after ten days of agonizing suspense which I could no longer control, I one day became almost insolent in my behavior, and watching an opportunity, rushed into the hospital, determined to see my father dead or alive, even should I be forced to use personal violence. Fortunately for me, the epidemic had by this time spread so rapid that all on the island, both in and out of hospital, seemed to wander about in state of semi-despair. Even the attendants inside were so much affected that my conduct passed unnoticed, or at least unheeded, and I was allowed to roam about at will among the dead and dying. 'Father! father!' was of course my cry; but it was drowned in the moaning and howling around. The destroy angel had been so active that day that the dead bodies were removed immediately from their rough couches and piled in tiers, one tier over another, on the hospital floor. I searched every bench but alas! my poor father was not there. With a throbbing heart I turned to the pile of corpses behind me, and, God forgive me, sir, but I hope neither you nor shall ever again see the sight that met my gaze. There was my poor father in the midst of the heap, his head and neck and shoulders protruding somewhat beyond the range of the others, and oh sir, would that it were untrue! would that I could believe it untrue! but true was still life in his body! I consciously indeed had fled, and possibly too, all hope of recovery had fled with it. We went the most charitable construction upon it and say that he was removed as incapable to make room for some more hopeful case; but, at all events, there lay my father, with life still in his body! Heaven forgive me, sir, but then I prayed earnestly for his death, and left the sickening place too much overpowered by emotion to render him any assistance even should such assistance have availed him anything. I heard afterwards that like a large number of others, his body was buried in a rude box in which there were also two more.—From Old Canadian Reminiscences in New Dominion Monthly for Dec.

FARMING FORTY YEARS AGO.

"And now Canadian bush life began real earnest. Bitterly, bitterly did I regret our large investment in pig when we came to discover that each scarce lot was as a white elephant on our hands, its trunks in hundreds of cases staring me to this very day. The first year, after erecting a log cabin, the chimneys and cracks filled in with clay, I cleared small space of about two acres and planted it nearly all in potatoes, which grew remarkably well. My poor wife helped me nobly through all these times and but for her assistance, many a time would I have given up in despair. Most after month has she taken her place in the logging field, from morning till night lifting sometimes so vehemently that, she herself has often expressed it 'sparks flew from her ears.' For a season or two, little by little, our circumstances were at least improving, but sir, dear seasons followed. I have said that had had to depend upon the Squire any pressing necessity. We began count up, however, my wife and I, and found that with flour now, meat again and other sundries, his bill against us was really enormous, and the inter-

Well, we carried it out! the letter,—sometimes indeed under great disadvantage; but nevertheless we survived it all; and although I cannot say would wish my dear ones to repeat the same experience to the same extent, still I cannot feel that I myself, nor indeed my good dame, is much the worse for it. RHEUMATISM CURED IN 12 HOURS.

Branton's RHEUMATIC ABSORBENT, will

"Forty-two years ago," said he, "we—that is my wife here and I—accompanied by my poor aged and widowed father, approached Quebec after a voyage of nine weeks on the Atlantic; but alas! not to land, as we had so long and so fondly hoped. In those days, sir, but little interest was taken in sanitary arrangements; certainly not the precautions which are now so common. Our ship was crowded with emigrants, most of whom, like ourselves, had not been properly advised as to the course we ought to pursue. To make a long story short, cholera, the fearful, malignant, black pestilence, broke out amongst us, and for many days we had a wild panic on board. But it is astonishing what the human mind is capable of enduring through usage. The horrible fear that first overpowered us all soon gave way to a quiet, serene calmness, at times, as I often thought, amounting to indifference, as hour by hour, and day by day, we saw our passengers and companions dying around us and carried up at midnight to be wound in the long canvas sheets and buried in the deep. Thank God, we ourselves escaped the contagion, and something like joy filled our hearts as we began to approach the ancient capital, but 'Quarantine! Quarantine!' was now the cry that reached us from those on shore, and back to quarantine we were sent for sixty days.

"You will excuse me, sir," continued the old man, as he approached this part of his tale, for the tears began to flow freely down his aged cheeks, "you will excuse me, sir, if the recollections of that experience still affected me sadly; for my lonesome, aged, and sainted father there found his grave, and oh! sir, such a grave! and such a burial! He had been attacked before we were a week on the island, and, knowing the rough, coarse usage to which all the other unfortunate victims had been subjected, we sought at first to conceal his case from the surgeons and treat him ourselves—for we all had been supplied with remedies of one kind or another." But his symptoms became more alarming; we had to apply for aid, and no sooner did the doctor arrive than the poor, pleading patient was immediately carried out of sight into the hospital. This was perhaps right, sir,—indeed I have no doubt, for several reasons, but it was; but it seemed hard, sir, that hands willing to minister to his comfort should be denied access to him. On the first occasion of this kind, I had made up my mind to kill 'Bossy' rather than starve her, and was going to put my resolution into practice, when one of my neighbor Dutchemen stopped me and let me into his plan of treating the animals. This was to gather all the green leaves I could get in the woods,—anything in fact that could by any possibility preserve the vital spark in 'Bossy' until the arrival of spring. I confess that at first I grieved to see one of God's creatures unable to stand on her feet through starvation; but in time I even got hardened to it. Our usual employment then, as early in spring as the snow would permit, was to assemble first at one neighbor's house, then at another's; get his cow, now utterly exhausted and worn to skin and bone, on a kind of rude platform made of poles or rails; carry her out to a spot in the woods from which we had cleared away the snow; there lay her down, and let her eat around her as best as she could without rising (for of her own strength she could neither rise nor stand.) In the course of a few hours we would remove her in a similar manner to another spot, and this round of operations among different neighbors and cows, would often constitute our occupation for perhaps a fortnight. Some of the animals, in the course of three or four days, would be able to keep their feet; others took one, sometimes two weeks; but ultimately they all managed to take care of themselves, and strange as it may seem, I have never yet seen one case resulting in death.—From Old Canadian Reminiscences in New Dominion Monthly for Dec.

DIPHTHERIA.

As the ravages of this disease continue to increase, judging from reports in our exchanges, we supplement what recently appeared in this column concerning it by the following report of the Sanitary Committee of the Board of Health, of New York city, approved and published by the Board Dec. 1st, 1874:—

MODE OF ATTACK.

Diphtheria is caused by the inoculation of the air passages with the diphtheric poison, which, from this point, infects the whole system; the local inflammation is attended by the formation of membrane (exudation); the fever and general symptoms are the result of this local infection.

HOW IT SPREADS.

Diphtheria is, therefore, a contagious disease (not perhaps as marked as scarlet fever) induced by contact with persons and objects infected. It may be diffused by the exhalations of the sick, by the air surrounding them, or directly by the exudation communicated in the act of kissing, coughing, spitting, sneezing, or by the infected articles used, as towels, napkins, handkerchiefs, &c. The poison clings with great tenacity to certain places, rooms and houses, where it may occasion cases after the lapse of months.

SYMPTOMS.

In ordinary attacks the poison begins to act the moment it lodges upon the

those on shore, and back to quarantine we were sent for sixty days.

"You will excuse me, sir," continued the old man, as he approached this part of his tale, for the tears began to flow freely down his aged cheeks, "you will excuse me, sir, if the recollections of that experience still affected me sadly; for my lonesome, aged, and sainted father there found his grave, and oh! sir, such a grave! and such a burial! He had been attacked before we were a week on the island, and, knowing the rough, coarse usage to which all the other unfortunate victims had been subjected, we sought at first to conceal his case from the surgeons and treat him ourselves—for we all had been supplied with remedies of one kind or another. But his symptoms became more alarming; we had to apply for aid, and no sooner did the doctor arrive than the poor, pleading patient was immediately carried out of sight into the hospital. This was perhaps right, sir,—indeed I have no doubt, for several reasons, but it was; but it seemed hard, sir, that hands willing to minister to his comfort should be denied access to him. We were not allowed to see him again, nor could even our enquires after his welfare be satisfactorily answered. The doctor was too busy, and his assistants knew not nor seemed to care to whom we had reference when we made our appeal to them. At length, after ten days of agonizing suspense which I could no longer control, I one day became almost insolent in my behavior, and watching an opportunity, rushed into the hospital, determined to see my father dead or alive, even should I be forced to use personal violence. Fortunately for me, the epidemic had by this time spread so rapidly that all on the island, both in and out of hospital, seemed to wander about in a state of semi-despair. Even the attendants inside were so much affected that my conduct passed unnoticed, or at least unheeded, and I was allowed to roam about at will among the dead and dying. 'Father! father!' was of course my first cry; but it was drowned in the moaning and howling around. The destroying angel had been so active that day that the dead bodies were removed immediately from their rough couches and piled in tiers, one tier over another, on the hospital floor. I searched every bench, but alas! my poor father was not there. With a throbbing heart I turned to the pile of corpses behind me, and, God forgive me, sir, but I hope neither you nor I shall ever again see the sight that there met my gaze. There was my poor father in the midst of the heap, his head, neck and shoulders protruding somewhat beyond the range of the others, and oh! sir, would that it were untrue! would that I could believe it untrue! but there was still life in his body! Consciousness indeed had fled, and possibly too, all hopes of recovery had fled with it. We will put the most charitable construction upon it and say that he was removed as incurable to make room for some more hopeful case; but, at all events, there lay my father, with life still in his body! Heaven forgive me, sir, but then I prayed earnestly for his death, and left the sickening place too much overpowered by emotion to render him any assistance even should such assistance have availed him anything. I heard afterwards that like a large number of others, his body was buried in a rude box in which there were also two more.—From Old Canadian Reminiscences in New Dominion Monthly for Dec.

FARMING FORTY YEARS AGO.

"And now Canadian bush life began in real earnest. Bitterly, bitterly did we regret our large investment in pine, when we came to discover that each separate lot was as a white elephant on our hands, its trunks in hundreds of cases staring me to this very day. The first year, after erecting a log cabin, the chinks and cracks filled in with clay, I cleared a small space of about two acres and planted it nearly all in potatoes, which grew remarkably well. My poor wife helped me nobly through all these times, and but for her assistance, many a time

able to keep their feet; others took one, sometimes two weeks; but ultimately they all managed to take care of themselves, and, strange as it may seem, I have never yet seen one case resulting in death.—From Old Canadian Reminiscences in New Dominion Monthly for Dec.

DIPHTHERIA.

As the ravages of this disease continue to increase, judging from reports in our exchanges, we supplement what recently appeared in this column concerning it by the following report of the Sanitary Committee of the Board of Health, of New York city, approved and published by the Board Dec. 1st, 1874:—

MODE OF ATTACK.

Diphtheria is caused by the inoculation of the air passages with the diphtheric poison, which, from this point, infects the whole system; the local inflammation is attended by the formation of membrane (exudation); the fever and general symptoms are the result of this local infection.

HOW IT SPREADS.

Diphtheria is, therefore, a contagious disease (not perhaps as marked as scarlet fever) induced by contact with persons and objects infected. It may be diffused by the exhalations of the sick, by the air surrounding them, or directly by the excretion communicated in the act of kissing, coughing, spitting, sneezing, or by infected articles used, as towels, napkins, handkerchiefs, &c. The poison clings with great tenacity to certain places, rooms and houses, where it may occasion cases after the lapse of months.

SYMPTOMS.

In ordinary attacks the poison begins to act the moment it lodges upon the tissues, but like a vaccination, causes but slight sensible effects in from two to five days; then there is marked prostration, dryness of throat, and pricking pain in swallowing; the throat becomes red, and patches of white exudation appear, and the glands of the neck swell. In mild cases these symptoms subside on the third and fourth day from their appearances; if more severe, these symptoms may be prolonged; if unfavorable, the fever increases, the local inflammation spreads, and exhaustion rapidly follows.

PREDISPOSING CONDITIONS.

The Person.—Diphtheria attacks by preference children between the ages of one and ten years, (the greatest mortality being in the second, third, and fourth year); children of feeble constitution, and those weakened by previous sickness; and those suffering from catarrh, croup, and other forms of throat affection.

Social Relations.—All classes are liable to diphtheria where it is prevailing, but those suffer most who live on low, wet grounds; in houses with imperfect drains or surrounded by offensive matters, as privies, decaying animal or vegetable refuse; in damp rooms, as cellars; in overcrowded or unventilated apartments.

Seasons.—Diphtheria is not affected by either heat or cold, drought or rain.

PRECAUTIONS.

The Dwelling and Apartment.—Cleanliness in and around the dwelling, and pure air in living and sleeping rooms, are of the most importance where any contagious disease is prevailing, as cleanliness tends both to prevent and mitigate it. Every kind and source of filth around and in the house should be thoroughly removed; cellars and foul areas should be cleaned and disinfected; drains should be put in perfect repair; dirty walls and ceilings should be lime washed, and every occupied room should be thoroughly ventilated. Apartments which have been occupied by persons sick with diphtheria should be cleansed with disinfectants; ceilings lime washed, and wood-work painted; the carpets, bedclothing, upholstered furniture, &c., exposed many days to fresh air and the sunlight (all articles which may be boiled or subjected to high degrees of heat, should be thus disinfected); such rooms should be exposed to currents of fresh air for at least one week before occupation.

When diphtheria is prevailing.—No

occurred, but don't be alarmed. On piece of the flies is on file." On men of fire the audience rose, their feet made a wild rush for the door. The smoke soon became suffocating, women fell fainting in the aisles, were trampled over. Hundreds jammed out of the windows and were severely injured. Three were picked up and to the hospital, and are not expected to live. A young man who jumped out window says another man was with him and got to the window, and while hanging on with his hands and endeavoring to get out became overpowered by the smoke, fell back, and must have consumed in the flames. Dresses a torn from ladies while lying in the aisle and on the sidewalk outside. All the theatre company got out safely except a man named Cumberion, who was badly burnt, and threw himself out of window. He will die. The firemen succeeded in confining the flames to theatre, and saving the rest of the building. Deiter's restaurant, directly in front of the theatre on Washington street, badly damaged by water, but not, as reported, destroyed. The fire had damaged the fronts of six dwellings Johnson street. The theatre was owned by the Brooklyn Theatre Association. The loss is now estimated at $125. The assurance could not be ascertained.

New York, Dec. 6.—When the fire partially subsided in the Brooklyn theatre this morning, the body of one woman was found just inside of the door burned to a crisp, her hands grasping door frame. She was a large, powerful woman, but was unrecognizable. Claxton, Mrs. Farren, Mr. Studley, Mr. Murdock were on the stage in costume of the Two Orphans, and finished their parts after the fire was mounded, and endeavored to allay excitement. Buck Lynch, a supernumerary, was burned, and otherwise injured, fatally. A. Foid-Evoux, wigmaker, and John Cumberion, ex-man, are seriously burned. A list of missing people is published.

A later story says, shortly after light this morning the firemen succeeded in getting as far as the fall of the circle, and there found a great number of bodies. They estimate about fifty; thirteen of them were brought out.

The removal of bodies from Brooklyn theatre fire continues, and the number steadily increasing. It is now thought that the number will reach from 175.

Sixty-five bodies have been recovered thus far; some twenty-five or thirty in view.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 6, noon.—Thence of bodies thus far recovered from ruins is about 75, and it is believed as many more are still in the ruins. They are mostly those of the occupants of family circle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The extent of disaster in the Brooklyn theatre became more appalling.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The bodies recovered are charged beyond recognition. It will take all day to get out the remaining bodies from the red hot ruins, extent of the disaster is not yet known.

There is intense excitement in the city and business is partly suspended.

The Park Theatre has been closed the week. A meeting of the theatre profession has been called for Thursday to concert measures for relief.

Wm. Bailey, police officer, who was duty in the family circle, says: "The panic was intense; one piled on to other; the landing was completely crushed; men and women fell powerless. The crush was appalling; the men trampled on the women, and big men ran widely over the smaller ones. It fully ten minutes to empty the theatre, but it seemed like an hour. Draught of the air through the theatre was terrible; it nearly blew my hat off."

Stage-manager Thorpe states that he discovered that a drop had been in from a burner, he ordered the carpenter to extinguish it. The carpenter, with two assistants, lowered the drop precipitated the catastrophe. The which was last in the play of the "Orphans" embraced a ceiling apart

FARMING FORTY YEARS AGO.

"And now Canadian bush life began in real earnest. The first year, after erecting a log cabin, the chinks and cracks filled in with clay, I cleared a small space of about two acres and planted it nearly all in potatoes, which grew remarkably well. My poor wife helped me nobly through all these times, and but for her assistance, many a time would I have given up in despair. Month after month has she taken her place in the logging field, from morning till night, lifting sometimes so vehemently that, as she herself has often expressed it 'the sparks flew frae her een.' For a season or two, little by little, our circumstances were at least improving, but sir, darker seasons followed. I have said that we had had to depend upon the Squire for any pressing necessity. We began to count up, however, my wife and I, and found that with flour now, meat again, and other sundries, his bill against us was rapidly enlarging, and the interest too—8 per cent.—was beginning to have a very formidable appearance in our eyes; so we determined one season that, come what would, we should endeavor to do without the Squire's assistance any longer.

"Communicating our resolve to our neighbors—for, sir, neighbors were neighbors in those days, worthy of the name.—they commended it and determined to do likewise. Well, we carried it out to the letter,—sometimes indeed under great disadvantage; but nevertheless we survive it all; and although I cannot say I would wish my dear ones to repeat the same experience to the same extent, still I cannot feel that I myself, nor indeed my good dame, is much the worse for it. One winter, I well remember, it would indeed have gone hard with us were it not for mashed turnips, which we had served up three times daily for months. Another season we really relished, as far superior to cold water in lieu of tea, a kind of coffee made by mashing beech-leaves in hot water. And what of our cattle in those times? Well, as a rule, the oxen fared tolerably. Them we had to feed, or but little work could be effected the following season. But poor 'Bossy' had often indeed a poor life of it. So long as food lasted, of course she got a share, but a spare one, with the rest; but often has it given out,—or at least diminished to such an extent that no more could be

When diphtheria is prevailing.—No child should be allowed to kiss strange children nor those suffering from sore throat; (the disgusting habits of compelling children to kiss every visitor is a well-known method of propagating other grave diseases than diphtheria); nor should it sleep with, nor be confined in rooms occupied by, or use articles, as toys, taken in the mouth, handkerchiefs, &c., belonging to children having sore throat, croup or catarrh. If the weather is cold, the child should be warmly clad with flannels.

When diphtheria is in the house or in the family.—The well children should be scrupulously kept apart from the sick in dry, well-aired rooms, and every possible source of infection through the air, by personal contact with the sick, and by articles used about them or in their rooms, should be rigidly guarded. Every attack of sore throat, cough, and catarrh, should be at once attended to; the feeble should have invigorating food and treatment.

Sick children.—The sick should be rigidly isolated in well-aired (the air being entirely changed at least hourly), sun-lighted rooms, the outflow of air being, as far as possible through the external windows by depressing the upper and elevating the under sash, or a chimney heated by a fire in an open fireplace; all discharges from the mouth and nose should be received into vessels containing disinfectants, as solutions of carbolic acid, or sulphate of zinc; or upon cloths, which are immediately burned; or if not burned, thoroughly boiled, or placed under a disinfecting fluid.

The scene which was last in the play of the "Orphans" embraced a ceiling apartment and the instant the burning drop came in contact with the inflammable ceiling it flashed, as though powder had been visionally scattered about the scene the properties were in a blaze.

Up to 1 p. m. 94 bodies had been taken from the ruins, and others were still lying in layers four deep.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Another man, Mr. Burroughs, is missing. Stuart Rand, reporter for the Commercial Courier, is supposed to be among the missing. Mr. Rogers, business manager of the theatre, says that most of those who lost their lives were in the gallery, fell with it into the cellar. He says might have got out if they had not been panic-stricken.

BROOKLYN.—Latest intelligence from the Brooklyn fire states that so far bodies have been recovered, and there are still others buried in the ruins. The Mayor called a meeting of the Board of Aldermen this afternoon to take action concerning the terrible panic.

The following are the names of the whose bodies have been identified: Patrick McEwan, Arthur Bell, Henry Palmer, Abraham Dietz, Stephen O. Thomas, Whistings, Jas. McEwan, A. Gray, Charles H. The majority of the bodies can not be identified, and many families will be deprived of the sad privilege of burying their dead, and in fact will know no more than that they visited the theatre on ill-fated night and will never more seen.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7, 1 a.m.—The bodies of the two missing actors were found half-past ten to-night.

It is stated that a man in the audience seeing escape impossible, drew a revolver and shot himself through the heart.

TERRIBLE LOSS OF LIFE.

A SCENE OF CONFUSION.

MORE CHARRED REMAINS IN THE RUINS.

NEW YORK Dec. 5, midnight.—Brooklyn Theatre is in flames, and it is feared the entire block in which it is located, corner of Washington and Johnson streets, will be destroyed.

Dec. 5, 1876.—The fire in Brooklyn Theatre at 11:30 p.m. The flames spread with lightning rapidity, and burst out through the door on Washington street. The panic and confusion among the audience was terrible, but so far as could be learned no lives were lost. The theatre is totally burned, entailing a loss of about $250,000, also Deiter's restaurant. So far the Post office next door does not appear to be injured. The fire is still burning, but it is thought to be under control.

One of the actors came to the front of the stage and said, "A small accident has occurred, but don't be alarmed. Only a piece of the floor is on fire." On mention of fire the audience rose to their feet and made a wild rush for the doors. The smoke soon became suffocating, and women fell fainting in the aisles and were trampled over. Hundreds jumped out of the windows and were severely injured. Three were picked up and sent to the hospital, and are not expected to live. A young man who jumped out of a window says another man was with him and got to the window, and while holding on with his hands and endeavoring to get out became enveloped with the smoke, fell back, and must have been consumed in the flames. Dresses were torn from ladies while lying in the aisles and on the sidewalk outside. All the theatre company got out safely except a fly-man named Cumbern, who was badly burnt, and threw himself out of the window. He will die. The firemen succeeded in confining the flames to the theatre, and saving the rest of the block. Deiter's restaurant, directly in front of the theatre on Washington street, is badly damaged by water, but not as first reported, destroyed. The fire badly damaged the fronts of six dwellings on Johnson street. The theatre was owned by the Brooklyn Theatre Association. The loss is now estimated at $125,000. The assurance could not be ascertained.

New York, Dec. 6.—When the flames partially subsided in the Brooklyn theatre this morning, the body of one woman was found just inside of the doorway burned to a crisp, her hands grasping the door frame. She was a large, powerful woman, but was unrecognizable. Kate Claxton, Mrs. Farren, Mr. Stubby, and Mr. Murdock were on the stage in the last act of the Two Orphans, and continued their parts after the fire was announced. The audience was in a panic, and many were injured. The fire was under control by 11:30 p.m. The loss is now estimated at $125,000. The assurance could not be ascertained.

The last intelligence gives the number of bodies recovered up to 11:30 p.m. at 285. The horror caused by the Brooklyn calamity had the effect of perceptibly reducing the attendance at the theatres in this city to-night. Union Square Theatre was closed and draped in mourning.

W. J. Fleming, an actor, who is acquainted with the construction of the Brooklyn Theatre, says:—The dome was of light wood, a mere skeleton form, light, dry and readily combustible, and through the great space above it the air circulated freely by a thorough draught from one end of the building to the other. Naturally, as soon as the flames sprang up among the flimsy flies and borders, the current of air drew them out between the roof and the dome. The unsubstantial dome, at the touch of that fiery cloud, shrivelled and burst into a flame, and disappeared like a dry forest leaf in a furnace, and through the enormous vacancy, where it had stood, the masses of flame rolled down into the auditorium, ed wrapping the galleries, licking up the dry wood-work, and carrying destruction everywhere, with almost lightning speed. The greater part of the victims were in the gallery, as is evinced by the facts that such clothing as can be distinguished is of poor quality.

But few articles of value were found on the bodies, and the larger part of those seeking friends among the dead have the appearance of people of moderate means, and many in absolute poverty.

A large number of workmen are recorded among the missing. All of those who escaped from the gallery tell stories of great panic and a frantic rush through the blinding smoke and cinders.

326 bodies have been found so far at the Brooklyn Theatre fire.

A TORONTO CLAIMANT IN THE FIELD.

It is reported that in February last Mr. Charles Robert O'Keefe, a bachelor, aged fifty-two years, died at Allahabad, India, leaving a fortune estimated at $24,000,000. Mr. O'Keefe was born in London. Both of his parents died before he reached his majority. He had one brother and sister, who are also dead. When about sixteen years of age he was apprenticed to a painter at Dungarvan, county of Waterford, Ireland, to learn that trade, but not liking the occupation, ran away from his master some two years later (in 1842), and went to India, and enlisted in the army. Subsequently he engaged in the opium trade between India and China, probably as an agent of the East India Company, and in course of time, by close attention to business and good luck, amassed a colossal fortune. It is said that there are about fifty claimants to the property, among them being Mr. Eugene O'Keefe, of Toronto, who has directed enquiries to be made in India with the view of ascertaining whether the report as to the existence of $24,000,000, supposed to have been left by the decess-

A skater's dress should be as close and unnumbered as possible. Large skirts get entangled with his own limbs, or those of the persons who pass near him; and all fulness of dress is exposed to the wind. Loose trousers, frocks, and more especially great-coats must be avoided; and indeed, by wearing additional under-clothing, they can always be dispensed with.

As the exercise of skating produces perspiration, flannel next the chest, shoulders, and loins, is necessary to avoid the evils produced by sudden chills in cold weather. The best dress is what is called a dress-coat, buttoned, tight, pantaloons, and laced boots (having the heel no higher than is necessary for the peg), which hold the foot tightly and steadily in its place, as well as give the best support to the ankle; for it is of no use to draw the straps of the skate hard, if the boot or shoe be loose.

PRELIMINARY AND GENERAL DIRECTIONS.

Either very rough or very smooth ice should be avoided. The person who for the first time attempts to skate, must not trust to a stick. He make a friend's hand his support, if he require one; but that should be soon relinquished, in order to balance himself. He will probably scramble about for half an hour or so, till he begins to find out where the edge of his skate is.

The beginner must be fearless, but not violent; nor even in a hurry. He should not let his feet get far apart, and keep his heels still nearer together. He must keep the ankle of the foot on the ice quite firm; not attempting to gain the edge of the skate by bending it, because the right mode of getting to either edge is by inclination of the whole body in the direction required; and this inclination should be made fearlessly and decisively.

The leg which is on the ice should be kept perfectly straight; for, though the knee must be somewhat bent at the time of striking, it must be straightened as quickly as possible without any jerk. The leg which is off the ice should also be kept straight, though not stiff, having an easy but slight play, the toe pointing downward, and the heel withdrawn from six to twelve inches of the other.

The learner must not look down at the ice, nor at his feet, to see how they perform. He may at first incline his body a little forward, for safety, but hold his head up, and see where he goes, his person erect, and his face rather elevated than otherwise.

When once off, he must bring both feet up together, and strike again, as soon as he finds himself steady enough, rarely allowing both feet to be on the ice together. The position of the arms should be easy and varied, one being always more raised than the other, this elevation being alternate, and the change corresponding with that of the legs; that is, the right arm being raised as the right leg is put down, and vice versa, so that the arm and leg of the same side may not be raised together.

The face must be always turned in the direction of the line intended to be described. Hence, in backward skating, the head will be inclined much over the shoulder, and forward skating, not slightly.

New York Dec. 5, midnight.—Brooklyn Theatre is in flames, and it is feared
the entire block in which it is located,
corner of Washington and Johnson
streets, will be destroyed.

PROJONIA.—The fire in Brooklyn
originated on the stage of the Brooklyn Theatre at 11:30 p.m. The flames spread with lightning rapidity, and burst out
through the door on Washington street.
The panic and confusion among the audience was terrible, but so far as could be learned no lives were lost. The theatre is totally burned, entailing a loss of about $250,000, also Delter's restaurant. So far the Post office next door does not appear to be injured. The fire is still burning, but it is thought to be under control.

One of the actors came to the front of the stage and said, "A small accident has occurred, but don't be alarmed. Only a piece of the floor is on fire." On mention of fire the audience rose, their feet and made a wild rush for the door.
The smoke soon became suffocating, and women fell fainting in the aisles and were trampled over. Hundreds jumped out of the windows and were severely injured. Three were picked up and sent to the hospital, and are not expected to live. A young man who jumped out of a window says another man was with him
and got to the window, and while holding on with his hands and endeavoring to get out became overpowered with the smoke, fell back, and must have been consumed in the flames. Dresses were torn from ladies while lying in the aisles and on the sidewalk outside. All the theatre company got out safely except a fly-man named Cumberion, who was badly burnt, and threw himself out of the window. He will die. The firemen succeeded in confining the flames to the theatre, and saving the rest of the block.
Delter's restaurant, directly in front of the theatre on Washington street, is badly damaged by water, but not, as first reported, destroyed. The fire badly damaged the fronts of six dwellings on Johnson street. The theatre was owned by the Brooklyn Theatre Association.
The loss is now estimated at $125,000.
The assurance could not be ascertained.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—When the flames
partially subsided in the Brooklyn theatre
this morning, the body of one woman
was found just inside of the doorway burned to a crisp, her hands grasping the door frame. She was a large, powerful woman, but was unrecognizable. Kate Claxton, Mrs. Farren, - Mr. Studley, and Mr. Murdock were on the stage in the last act of the Two Orphans, and continued their parts after the fire was announced, and endeavored to allay the excitement. Buck Lynch, a supernumerary, was burned, and otherwise injured, fatally. A. Foid-Evoux, watchmaker, and John Cumberion, expres-man, are seriously burned. A list of 32
missing people is published.

A later story says, shortly after daylight this morning, the firemen succeeded in getting as far as the fall of the dress circle, and there found a great number of bodies. They estimate about fifty; only thirteen of them were brought out as yet.

The removal of bodies from Brooklyn theatre fire continues, and the number is steadily increasing. It is now thought that the number will reach from 150
to 175.

Sixty-five bodies have been recovered
thus far; some twenty-five or thirty are in view.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 6, noon.—The number of bodies thus far recovered from the ruins is about 75, and it is believed that as many more are still in the ruins. They are mostly those of the occupants of the family circle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The extent of the disaster in the Brooklyn theatre becomes more appalling.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The bodies recovered are charged beyond recognition.
It will take all day to get out the remaining bodies from the red hot ruins. The extent of the disaster is not yet known.

There is intense excitement in the city,
and business is partly suspended.

The Park Theatre has been closed for the week. A meeting of the theatrical profession has been called for Thursday of the building to the other. Naturally, as soon as the flames sprang up among the flimsy flies and borders, the current of air drew them out between the roof

and the dome. The unsubstantial dome,
at the touch of that fiery cloud, unravelled
and burst into a flame, and disappeared
like a dry forest leaf in a furnace, and through the enormous vacancy where it had stood, the masses of flame rolled down into the auditorium, overwrapping
the galleries, kicking up the dry woodwork, and carrying destruction everywhere, with almost lightning speed. The greater part of the victims were in the gallery, as is evinced by the facts that such clothing as can be distinguished is of poor quality.

But few articles of value were found on the bodies, and the larger part of those seeking friends among the dead have the appearance of people of moderate means,
and many in absolute poverty.

A large number of workmen are recorded among the missing. All of those who escaped from the gallery tell stories
of great panic and a frantic rush through
the blinding smoke and cinders.

326 bodies have been found so far at the Brooklyn Theatre fire.

THE O'KEEFE FORTUNE.
AN INHERITANCE OF TWENTY-FOUR MILLIONS.

A TORONTO CLAIMANT IN THE FIELD.

It is reported that in February last Mr.
Charles Robert O'Keefe, a bachelor, aged fifty-two years, died at Allahabad, India,
leaving a fortune estimated at $24,000,- 000. Mr. O'Keefe was born in London.
Both of his parents died before he reached his majority. He had one brother and sister, who are also dead. When about sixteen years of age he was apprenticed to a painter at "Dungarvan, county
of Waterford; Ireland, to learn that trade,
but, not liking the occupation, ran away
from his master some two years later (in 1842), and went to India, and enlisted in the army. Subsequently he engaged in the opium trade between India and China, probably as an agent of the East India Company, and in course of time,
by close attention to business and good luck, amassed a colossal fortune. It is said that there are about fifty claimants
to the property, among them being Mr.
Eugene O'Keefe, of Toronto, who has directed enquiries to be made in India
with the view of ascertaining whether the report as to the existence of $24,000,000, supposed to have been left by the deceased Mr. O'Keefe has any foundation.
Should the result of these enquiries prove satisfactory Mr. Eugene O'Keefe will at once take steps to prosecute his claim. A Georgetown (Ky.) exchange has the following in reference to a few of the other claimants:—

P. J. O'Keefe is a shoemaker, and for the past fifteen months has been working for our townsman, J. F. Gasbar, at moderate wages. He has always worked at his trade, in Ireland, England, and Kentucky. He came to this place from Cynthiana. He has a wife, whom he married in England, and eight children.
The wife was keeping a toll-gate on the Georgetown and Lessburg turnpike. The Danville brother is now in Missouri
to arrange some pecuniary matters preparatory to a visit with the Georgetown brother to England and Ireland to establish their claim to the fortune. The fourth heir, a sister, if living, is, as previously stated, in England, though nothing has been heard from her for the past eighteen years. The brothers and sisters were raised by the father of the deceased India Oresus. The Georgetown O'Keefe has received a letter from the priest who married him in England corroborating the death of his rich India cousin, and also referring to the great fortune left behind."

and laced boots (having the heel no higher than is necessary for the peg), which hold
the foot tightly and steadily in its place, as well as give the best support to the ankle;
for it is of no use to draw the straps of the skate hard, if the boot or shoe be

PRELIMINARY AND GENERAL DIRECTIONS.

Either very rough or very smooth ice should be avoided. The person who for the first time attempts to skate, must not

The beginner must be fearless, but not violent; nor even in a hurry. He should not let his feet get far apart, and keep his heels still nearer together. He must keep the ankle of the foot on the ice quite firm; not attempting to gain the edge of the skate by bending it, because the right mode of getting to either edge is by inclination of the whole body in the direction required; and this inclination
should be made fearlessly and decisively.

The leg which is on the ice should be kept perfectly straight; for, though the knee must be somewhat bent at the time of striking, it must be straightened as quickly as possible without any jerk.
The leg which is off the ice should also be kept straight, though not stiff, having an easy but slight play, the toe pointing downwards, and the heel within from six to twelve inches of the other.

The learner must not look down at the ice, nor at his feet, to see how they perform. He may at first incline his body
a little forward, for safety, but hold his head up, and see where he goes, his person erect, and his face rather elevated than otherwise.

When once off, he must bring both feet
up together, and strike again, as soon as he finds himself steady enough, rarely allowing both feet to be on the ice together. The position of the arms should be easy and varied; one being always more raised than the other, this elevation
being alternate, and the change corresponding with that of the legs; that is,
the right arm being raised as the right leg is put down, and vice versa, so that the arm and leg of the same side may not be raised together.

The face must be always turned in the direction of the line intended to be described. Hence, in backward skating, the head will be inclined much over the shoulder; in forward skating, but slightly.

THE ORDINARY RUN, OR INSIDE EDGE FOR-WARD.

The first attempt of the beginner is to walk, and this walk shortly becomes a sliding gait, done entirely on the inside
edge of the skate.

The first impulse is to be gained by pressing the inside edge of one skate against the ice, and advancing with the opposite foot. To effect this, the beginner must bring the feet nearly together,
turn the left somewhat out, place the right a little in advance and at right angles with it, lean forward with the right shoulder, and at the same time
move the right foot onwards, and press
sharply, or strike the ice with the inside
edge of the left skate,—care being taken instantly to throw the weight on the right foot. While thus in motion, the skater must bring up the left foot nearly
to a level with the other, and may for the present proceed a short way on both feet.

He must next place the left foot in advance in its turn, bring the left shoulder forward, inclining to that side, strike
from the inside edge of the right skate,
and proceed as before.

Finally, this motion has only to be repeated on each foot alternately, gradually keeping the foot from which he struck longer off the ice, till he has gained sufficient command of himself to keep it off altogether, and is able to strike directly from one to the other, without at any time having them both on the ice together.
Having practised this till he has gained some degree of firmness and power, and a command of his balance, he may proceed to

le glands of the neck swell. In mild cases these symptoms subside on the third and fourth day from their appearance; more severe, these symptoms may be prolonged; if unfavorable, the fever increases, the local inflammation spreads, and exhaustion rapidly follows.

PREDISPOSING CONDITIONS.

The Person.—Diphtheria attacks by reference children between the ages of ten and ten years, (the greatest mortality being in the second, third, and fourth year;) children of feeble constitution, and those weakened by previous sickness; and those suffering from catarrh, croup, and other forms of throat affection.

Social Relations.—All classes are liable to diphtheria where it is prevailing, but those suffer most who live on low wet grounds; in houses with imperfect drains; surrounded by offensive matters, as stables, decaying animal or vegetable refuse; in damp rooms, as cellars; in overcrowded or unventilated apartments.

Seasons.—Diphtheria is not affected by either heat or cold, drought or rain.

PRECAUTIONS.

The Dwelling and Apartment.—Cleanliness in and around the dwelling and in air in living and sleeping rooms, are of the most importance where any contagious disease is prevailing, as cleanliness tends both to prevent and mitigate it. Every kind and source of filth around and in the house should be thoroughly removed; cellars and foul areas should be drained and disinfected; drains should be put in perfect repair; dirty walls and ceilings should be lime washed, and every occupied room should be thoroughly ventilated. Apartments which have been occupied by persons sick with diphtheria should be cleansed with disinfectants; ceilings lime washed, and woodwork painted; the carpets, bedclothing, upholstered furniture, &c., exposed many days to fresh air and the sunlight (all articles which may be boiled or subjected to high degrees of heat, should be thus disinfected); such rooms should be exposed to currents of fresh air for at least one week before occupation.

When diphtheria is prevailing.—No child should be allowed to kiss strange children nor those suffering from sore throat; (the disgusting habits of compelling children to kiss every visitor is a well-tried method of propagating other rarer diseases than diphtheria); nor should it sleep with, nor be confined in rooms occupied by, or use articles, as toys, taken in the mouth, handkerchiefs, &c., belonging to children having sore throat, croup or catarrh. If the weather is cold, the child should be warmly clad with flannels.

When piphtheria is in the house or in the family.—The well children should be scrupulously kept apart from the sick in airy, well-aired rooms, and every possible source of infection through the air, by personal contact with the sick, and by articles used about them or in their rooms, should be rigidly guarded. Every attack of sore throat, cough, and catarrh, should be at once attended to; the feeble should have invigorating food and treatment.

Sick children.—The sick should be rigidly isolated in well-aired (the air being strictly changed at least hourly), sunlit rooms, the outflow of air being, as far as possible through the external windows by depressing the upper and levating the under sash, or a chimney heated by a fire in an open fireplace; all discharges from the mouth and nose should be received into vessels containing disinfectants, as solutions of carbolic acid, or sulphate of zinc; or upon cloths, which are immediately burned; or if not burned, thoroughly boiled, or placed under a disinfecting fluid.

"Pa, what does it mean to be tried by jury of one's peers?" "It means, my son, that a man is to be tried by a jury composed of men who are his equals—on an equality with him—so that they will have no prejudice against him." "Then, pa, I suppose you'd have to be tried by a jury of bald-headed men?"

A later story says, shortly after daylight this morning the firemen succeeded in getting as far as the fall of the dress circle, and there found a great number of bodies. They estimate about fifty; only thirteen of them were brought out as yet. The removal of bodies from Brooklyn theatre fire continues, and the number is steadily increasing. It is now thought that the number will reach from 150 to 175.

Sixty-five bodies have been recovered thus far; some twenty-five or thirty are in view.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 6, noon.—The number of bodies thus far recovered from the ruins is about 75, and it is believed that as many more are still in the ruins. They are mostly those of the occupants of the family circle.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The extent of the disaster in the Brooklyn theatre becomes more appalling.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The bodies recovered are charged beyond recognition. It will take all day to get out the remaining bodies from the red hot ruins. The extent of the disaster is not yet known. There is intense excitement in the city, and business is partly suspended.

The Park Theatre has been closed for the week. A meeting of the theatrical profession has been called for Thursday to concert measures for relief.

Wm. Bailey, police officer, who was on duty in the family circle, says:—"The panic was intense; one piled on top of other; the landing was completely blocked; men and women fell powerless. The crush was appalling; the men trampled on the women, and big men rushed wildly over the smaller ones. It took fully ten minutes to empty the dress circle, but it seemed like an hour. The draught of the air through the theatre was terrible; it nearly blew my hat off."

Stage-manager Thorpe states that when he discovered that a drop had been ignited from a burner, he ordered the stage carpenter to extinguish it. The latter, with two assistants, lowered the drop and precipitated the catastrophe. The scene which was last in the play of the "Two Orphans" embraced a ceiling apartment, and the instant the burning drop came in contact with the inflammable ceiling in a flash, as though powder had been previously scattered about the scenery, the entire properties were in a blaze.

Up to 1 p. m. 94 bodies had been taken from the ruins, and others were still visible laying in layers four deep.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—Another actor, Mr. Burroughs, is missing. Stuart C. Hand, reporter for the Commercial Advertiser, is supposed to be among the victims. Mr. Rogers, business manager of the theatre, says that most of those who lost their lives were in the gallery, and fell with it into the cellar. He says all might have got out if they had not been panic-stricken.

RECOVERING.—Latest intelligence from the Brooklyn fire states that so far 245 bodies have been recovered, and that there are still others buried in the ruins. The Mayor called a meeting of the Board of Aldermen this afternoon to take action concerning the terrible panic.

The following are the names of those whose bodies have been identified:—Patrick McEwan, Arthur Bell, Henry L. Palmer, Abraham Dietz, Stephen Oram, Thomas Whistard, Jas. McGowan, Wm. A. Gray, Charles H. Styles, Louis L. Becket, Mary Mulvaney, Stephen Crane, John McGinnis, Joseph Looney, John Addison, James Gay, Mrs. Ann Martin, Mrs. Richard Berry.

The majority of the bodies can never be identified, and many families will be deprived of the sad privilege of burying their dead, and in fact will know no more than that they visited the theatre on that ill-fated night and will never more be seen.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7, 1 a.m.—The bodies of the two missing actors were found at half-past ten to-night.

It is stated that a man in the audience, seeing escape impossible, drew a revolver and shot himself through the heart.

CLAIMANTS.—P. J. O'Keefe is a shoemaker, and for the past fifteen months has been working for our townsman, J. F. Gasler, at moderate wages. He has always worked at his trade, in Ireland, England, and Kentucky. He came to this place from Cynthia. He has a wife, whom he married in England, and eight children. THE MOLSON'S BANK SWINDLE.

THE BLAME OF THE AFFAIR CHARGED AGAINST JOY.

Montreal, Dec. 6.

The father of Glass, the defaulting Molsons Bank clerk, makes the following statement: Shortly after Joy entered into the bank here, he began to borrow money from Glass, the teller, to meet his own personal expenses. Glass wanted this borrowing system to stop, and the amount to be paid back, but Joy said, "Never mind it, never mind it, I'll keep your cash all straight." From the beginning the trouble commenced, and they began to speculate in stocks on joint account. Joy undertaking to keep the cash all straight. From time to time, as the stocks they were operating in depreciated, they were compelled to furnish additional margins to have stocks held by their brokers. Glass wished to let the shares go, and to close up the matter, but Joy always urged him to hold on and pay up the additional amounts, he, as before undertaking to keep the cash straight. This went on for a considerable length of time, until, at last, Joy got sick, when he was no longer in a position to keep the cash straight, especially at the end of the month, when the balances were made up and the cash counted. Among Joy's duties was the receiving remittances from branches, and from his position he knew actually when cash was to be counted. Consequently, he was always able to put in a sufficient amount to keep it straight, as he had undertaken to do. At last, however, getting sick, and not being at his post, he decided on throwing the whole onus of this affair upon Glass by writing a note to the Manager, Mr. Thomas, and inventing a statement that Glass was about to run away with $35,000 on the bank's funds. Some short time before this Joy suggested that they should take $14,000 or $15,000 and go off with it, but Glass positively refused to do this, saying that they were in the same boat and must face the difficulty together. Mr. Whittier, broker, who is Joy's brother-in-law, says that Joy is wholly unconnected with Glass' dealings, further than that he concealed the matter as stated. A writ of seizure before judgment for $12,259 was served on Mr. Withers and Gordon & Lindsay at the instance of the bank, claiming the amount of money and securities in their hands belonging to Glass.

"Mr. Jones, you said you were connected with the fine arts; do you mean that you are a sculptor?" "No, Sir; I don't sculpt myself, but I furnish the stone to the man who does."

When a Chinese bank fails, all the officers have their heads cut off and flung into a corner with the assets; and it has been 500 years since there was a bank failure in that country.

He must next place the left foot in advance in its turn, bring the left shoulder forward, inclining to that side, strike from the inside edge of the right skate, and proceed as before.

Finally, this motion has only to be repeated on each foot alternately, gradually keeping the foot from which he struck longer off the ice, till he has gained sufficient command of himself to keep it off altogether, and is able to strike directly from one to the other, without at any time having them both on the ice together. Having practised this till he has gained some degree of firmness and power, and a command of his balance, he may proceed to

THE FORWARD ROLL, OR OUTSIDE EDGE.

This is commonly reckoned the first step to figure skating, as, when it is once effected the result follows with ease. The impulse is gained in the same manner as for the ordinary run; but, to get on the outside edge of the right foot, the moment that foot is in motion, the skater must advance the left shoulder, throw the right arm back, look over the right shoulder, and incline the whole person boldly and decisively on that side, keeping the left foot suspended behind.

As he proceeds he must bring the left foot past the inside of the right, with a slight jerk, which produces an opposing balance of the body; the right foot must quickly press, first on the outside of the heel, then on the inside, or its toe; the left foot must be placed down in front, before it is removed more than about eight or ten inches from the other foot; and, by striking outside to the left, giving at the same moment a strong push with the inside of the right toe, the skater passes from right to left, inclining to the left side, in the same manner as he did to the right. He then continues to change from left to right, and from right to left, in the same manner. At first he should not remain long upon one leg, nor scruple occasionally to put the other down to assist; and throughout he must keep himself erect, leaning most on the heel.

The Dutch travelling roll is done on the outside edge forward, in the manner just represented, except that there is described a small segment of a very large circle, diverging from the straight line no more than is requisite to keep the skate on its edge.

The cross roll or figure 8 is also done on the outside edge forward. This is only the completion of the circle on the outside edge; and it is performed by crossing the legs, and striking from the outside instead of the inside edge. In order to do this, as the skater draws to the close of the stroke on his right leg, he must throw the left quite across it, which will cause him to press hard on the outside of the right skate, from which he must immediately strike, at the same time throwing back the left arm, and looking over the left shoulder, to bring him well upon the outside of that skate. By completing the circle in this manner on each leg, the 8 is formed: each circle being small, complete, and well-formed, before the foot is changed.

OUR WINTER PORTS.

Until this present season the people of Canada, especially of the western provinces have been compelled, during the winter season, to find an outlet to the Atlantic through United States territory. Our mails to England were sent entirely through the United States to Portland, or New York, and one of the strongest arguments that could be used in favor of confederation with the Maritime Provinces and of the construction of the Intercolonial railway was to advocate the difficulty of being unable to reach the ocean in winter season through Canadian territory. During the season of open navigation our mail steamships sail directly to Quebec and Montreal with the passengers and cargoes, but for fully five months in the year these ports are sealed up by ice. This year, for the first time, we have in the Intercolonial railway, a highway of our own to the ocean, and our government have wisely resolved to try the experiment of sending our mails direct to Halifax instead of to Portland as heretofore.

The first mail was sent through by the Intercolonial last week, and orders have been given to the Allen Mail Steamships to call weekly at Halifax with and for our mails in the future during the winter season. The experiment is attended with many more difficulties than would at first seem apparent. Formerly these steamships did not call at Halifax at all, and it seems now a matter of much doubt if there will be sufficient passenger and freight traffic to meet their extra expense in doing so, of course Sir Hugh Allen strongly opposed the change in consequence. His steamers still run to Portland, as heretofore, and by calling at Halifax they have some hundreds of miles farther to run at each trip. Then, the distance, by rail, from Montreal to Halifax is some hundreds of miles more than from Montreal to Portland, and the expense of conveying mail and passengers will be more, and it yet remains to be seen whether the severe snows and cold of the region through which the Intercolonial railway passes may not prove a serious hindrance to regularity of running during the winter seasons. If it does the route, as a mail route, may have yet to be abandoned.

The great mistake of building the Intercolonial railway by the terrible circuitous and long route of the St. Lawrence shore is painfully apparent in connection with this winter port business. Let any one examine a map and see at a glance what a vast amount of unnecessary travel must be performed because of the circuitousness of the line of the Intercolonial. Had something like a straight line been selected between Quebec and Halifax nearly all of the difficulties now in the way might have been but little, if any objections to the Intercolonial for winter travel. It is a well known fact that the Reform party, then in opposition, resisted the circuitous route as persistently as possible, but the pliant Sir John and his pliant followers, in order to command the continued support of the French members, consented to perpetrate this lasting injury and loss to the Dominion.

United States where every kind of trade is highly "protected" times have been even worse than with ourselves, and in England, when free trade prevails business has been exceedingly dull, and it is therefore as clearly demonstrated as need be, that no legislative policy could, or would, hinder the depression through which we are passing.

When times are bad the less thoughtful favor any change, feeling that a change of some kind is needed, and many a rebellion among the unemployed and the needy, has been with difficulty suppressed, as no change of policy could have at all given relief to the difficulties complained of. In Canada, however, our people seem too intelligent, too loyal, and too sensible to be led away by the interested cry of mere agitators for political purposes.

THE OPPOSITION OF WIVES.

If a widow surrounded by a family of helpless little children, believing herself to be in a destitute condition, were to learn that a large amount of money was on deposit in some bank to her credit, that it was enough for all her future necessities, she would rejoice like one who sees the dead come back to life. And if she were to learn that the best friend she ever knew had deposited it there, and that he did it for fear lest she might some day be reduced to want; how would she cherish the memory of that friend.

A few years since, a gentleman living in the city of Washington, and doing a thriving business announced to his wife his intention of insuring his life. She opposed him strenuously, and for a time succeeded in dissuading him from his purpose; but he was haunted with a vague and apparently unreasonable fear that his family might some day be in needy circumstances, and so he secured the insurance, placed the policy in his safe, and said nothing about it. The years went peacefully by and he amassed a fortune, never giving a thought to the policy except when the annual premium was called for. During the great panic in September, 1873, he died. Every dollar of his money was invested in the stock of a note bank, which failed, and it was lost. All went to pay the creditors of the bank. A great deal of sympathy was manifested for the family thus driven from affluence to penury, and acquaintances wondered what they would do. To all appearances it was a sad case. Ten days after the funeral, the widow, while examining a package of private papers came upon a policy drawn in her favor for $10,000. Within was a slip of paper on which were written these words: "I have effected this insurance against the wishes of my wife, and it is the only secret I have kept from her since the day we were married. It has been a comfort to me to feel that this amount is secured to her above any possibility of loss." That family was saved by this act of prudent forethought, just as thousands of other families have been saved.

In the light of such an illustration, how strange it is that a wife should ever oppose her husband when he seeks to insure his life for her benefit. On his part it is a kind and manly act, and one that can in no wise affect injuriously the family. A woman little knows what she is doing when she dissuades her husband from protecting her with a policy. An incident is related by a well known Agent, whose words cannot be questioned as follows: He had an acquaintance whom he importuned to insure, and who expressed his willingness to do so, providing his wife would give her consent. For some unaccountable reason, he said, she had always been opposed to it. One evening, he was invited to his friend's house, and as the opportunity offered, he sought by subsequential arguments to overcome the wife's objections, and was partially successful, so much so, in fact that she consented to the making out of an application. But on the following day

As it is, the Intercolonial, for a great portion of its length, passes near the St. Lawrence, and is therefore not much needed in summer, being so near to good navigation, while in the winter season the route is so long, so cold, and so likely to be impeded by storms, that it is of but questionable utility as a highway to the ocean.

Having passed over the road since its opening we have no hesitation in recommending it as a well built and well equipped road in every respect, with excellent passenger accommodations, and very fine scenery during the summer season. Great precaution has been taken against the dreaded snow blockades of winter. Miles of strong snowsheds have been erected at the cuttings and most exposed places, and the hope is entertained that trains may be kept running with regularity throughout the whole season, but because of the serious disadvantages of its location, there can be little hope entertained that it will ever prove commercially remunerative to the Dominion.

BETTER TIMES.

An Almonte correspondent of the Globe writes in a very hopeful strain in regard to the state of the woollen trade in that town. Almonte is a thrifty town depending very largely on the woollen trade for its prosperity. There are four or five large woollen factories located there, and, like most other establishments of that kind they have felt the severe pinch of the general business stagnation during the past few months. Now, however, in the language of the correspondent, "every spindle is running, every loom is busy. The demand for the products of those mills is so great that they cannot afford to close after ten hours work each day, but are all running two or three hours daily, over time. Orders for goods are being refused—cannot be filled."

The news seems almost too good to be true. It is particularly encouraging as some indication that the worst may be past in regard to our manufacturing business. For the sake of the country, and for the sake of those who depend on their daily earnings for their daily bread, we hope that this is the case.

We notice from the London Advertiser that the activity in the coal oil business continues in that city and in the oil bearing district. New refineries are being put into operation, more hands are being employed, and the prices grow firmer. We understand, too, that in Montreal the boot and shoe trade is much healthier and livelier than it was last year.

We are not sanguine enough to suppose that business will soon become as brisk and prosperous as it was in our best times, as the causes of depression are by no means yet all removed, but the better indications go to show that the stagnation

But on the following day she was as bitterly opposed as ever, and the order for the policy was countermanded. During that year the agent helped carry his friend to his silent home in the cemetery, and the wife who had so foolishly opposed the insurance was compelled to earn her support by resorting to her needle.

The above extract which we clip from one of our leading insurance exchanges, will we are sure be read with interest by a large number of our readers. If it has its desired effect we shall be well repaid for inserting the same.

We were of opinion that none of our ladies around Napanee would be so blind to their own interest as to oppose such an unselfish act on the part of their natural defenders. Mr. W. We are not sanguine enough to suppose that business will soon become as brisk and prosperous as it was in our best times, as the causes of depression are by no means yet all removed, but the better indications go to show that the stagnation was by no means attributed to the want of a "protective policy" which the Conservative party have of late been trying so hard to make capital out of. Had the people accepted as true the sayings of such men as Dr. Tupper and the Gibb's they would believe that unless a heavy duty on all imported manufactures was at once imposed little else than commercial ruin was in store for us. Of course the hard times have aided them very much in their work of creating a dissatisfaction with the existing state of things, and discontent with the party in power and their policy, and so long as business remains as dull as it has been they will find it of advantage to try and disturb the public mind in the interests of their party. Let times improve, and business increase in consequences and their trade in this kind of agitation is gone. It is creditable to the good sense of our people that the agitators have not been more successful than they have considering the efforts they have made and the means they have resorted to. It is a well known fact that when business becomes dull and men are compelled to be idle, for want of employment, a capital opportunity is offered to demagogues to stir up dissatisfaction and discontent, and the opposition party have been making the most of their opportunity. They have been but partially successful however, and the people are quite intelligent enough to know that in the Ada Gray.

Miss Ada Gray, bid all those assembled at the station on Saturday night a tender fare-vell, shaking hands promiscuously with the crowd. The company's performances here were not what might be called a success.

Beautiful Chart.

Centennial Award.

Mr. A. Dullmage, agent for the Hudson's Bay Company, was awarded a bronze medal for his exhibit of two deer's heads, with the horns interlocked. These heads were found near the big rock at Michino ge Lake, in these counties, and were really a strange curiosity.

Another Chance.

A. C. Davis & Bros, another of our old, reliable and well established firms are offering goods at from 10 to 20 per cent discount for cash, with a view to a dissolution of partnership. Now is the time for decided bargains.

The Whig.

The Whig gives us the following:—"Mayor Williams, of Napanee, will have the opposition of Mr. Rutnap. The people of the village are getting excited over the Municipal elections." What village does it refer to. We were under the impression, the Town of Napanee had this matter in hand.

Corrected.

The M. E. Church minister, on Sabbath last considered it necessary to announce from the pulpit, that the annual Tea Meeting in connection with that church was not to be held on Monday evening last, as stated by the Beaver, but was to be on Monday evening the 18th, as published in the Express and Standard.

S. S. Entertainment.

A Sabbath School social and literary entertainment in connection with the Presbyterian Sabbath School of this place, will be held in the church on the first Thursday after Christmas, a Christmas Tree and other things for the benefit and entertainment of the children, will be provided, of which further notice will be given.

Rose & Fralick have received in addition to their large stock of damaged goods, a consignment from a Montreal House, of a lot of 200 over coats, of the very best material, to be sold at half their real value. Go and see them in the Paisley Block.

To Open Again.

We are glad to learn that the store, lately occupied by Messrs Rose & Fralick will soon be repaired. That enterprising firm expect to get back to the old place about the first of January next, when they will reopen with an entirely new stock of goods, fresh from the cheapest Canadian and American markets.

The place to get over shoes, is at Rose & Fralick's, in Wm. Miller's old store. 500 pairs on hand.

Cool Burgess.

The name of the manager of this troupe is a sufficient guarantee that the entertainment will be first class, and we predict for the company the same success which has always attended them in Napanee. Notice.

Clarke, late of Manchester, Eng., will be at the Briscoe House, Napanee, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Dec. 20, 21, 22 and 23, where he will be prepared to treat all Chronic and Lingered Diseases. Dr. Clarke is no stranger, being well known here, and of established reputation.

All our stock of Tweeds, we offer at from 10 to 20 per cent discount. Cash only. DAVIS & BRO.

Xmas Tree and S. S. Concert.

The programmes for a Grand Concert, at Napanee Mills, on Friday evening, 22nd inst., by the Sabbath School of that place, have been issued, and judging from the array of talent which will appear on the occasion, we predict one of the most successful entertainments ever given in that village. Mr. B. F. Lewis, the active superintendent of the School, has devoted considerable time and expense in making necessary arrangements, and should be greeted by a full house. A Christmas Tree, loaded with presents for the little ones, will be a prominent feature of the entertainment. Admission 25c.; children 15 cents.

In order to hurt the hard times, we offer Clothing fully 10 to 20 per cent less than former years. Prices, Cash only. DAVIS & BRO.

A Silver Mine.

Mr. E. Perry of Tamworth has found a vein of silver of undoubted value on his property in the Township of Barrie. An assay of the ore was made at different place, Boston, England and Nevada, and all gave about the same result,—say $50 worth of silver, and 900 lbs. of lead to the ton of raw ore. The shaft has been sunk to a considerable depth, and the vein grows larger as it goes down. Men of practical experience pronounce it immensely rich. Mr. Perry has had offers of purchase from an English Company as well as from a wealthy miner in America. This mine is located on Marble Lake, and near the famous mountain on Lake Michinonge, visited by some of our town-men some years ago in quest of a vein of silver, said to be located there.

We are bound to sell the Cheapest and Best Clothing in town. DAVIS & BRO.

A Fast Sleigh Ride.

One of Messrs. Harress & Empey's horses attached to a cutter for the first time this season, with a fast young woman driving, ran away on Tuesday afternoon, starting from the livery office, and making the snow fly nicely, in its wild career up Dundas Street. The driver displayed considerable dexterity with the ribbons, and managed to keep her nag in the road, although several times in danger of being capsize and thrown out, by unthinking persons trying to stop the horse by blocking the road. When last seen, horse, cutter and driver, loomed up beautifully against the western horizon, as the rig passed swiftly over Piety Hill. We have since learned that the above runaway colided with one of Mr. Blewett's livery rigs, and wound up in a general smash. Moral,—The faster we live, the greater the crash, when suddenly brought up.

The red man has no pockets whatever; the Turk has two pockets; the people of the South of Europe have rarely more than five, while the man of Angol-Saxon blood has nine, or—counting those in his overcoat—ten well defined and practicable pockets. Representative government, fine-cut tobacco trial by jury, and revolving pistols, are the precious inheritance of the nine pocketed race. Ignorance, superstition and a general assortment of miseries are the lot of those who have not developed more than four or five pockets."

Try Smith & Anderson's famous 50c tea.

Juvenile Entertainment.

As will be seen by posters. The Rev. F. B. Stratton, of Morven, is out again with his band of juveniles. Perhaps no man of his profession has ever taken a deeper interest in the welfare of the youth of that section than himself, and you have but to go and witness these festivities to say with us, after being present last year. "This beats all the concerts and tea-meetings yet." Miss Frank Stratton, who has the special charge of training the little folks, will preside at the instrument. Mr. Jasper Snider, who is an expert in the skating rink biz, was engaged to manage the rink, which is located at the foot of West street, on the river. Closing Business.

We regret to see that R. Downey & Bros., contemplate closing their very large and deservedly popular Dry Goods establishment in this town. This business has been carried on for the last fifteen years in a manner that has reflected great credit on its systematic and business like management. The closing down of it will be felt very materially by the farming community and people generally throughout the country. The energy, enterprise and straight forward business character of the firm, is too widely known to need any eulogy from us. We trust that time may brighten and that they may consider it advisable to continue longer in business. A reference to the advertising columns will convince our readers that great bargains are being offered at Downey's for cash.

Getting People to Church.

The London Correspondent of Harper's Bazar, gives the following:—"The Baptist community of Briton Ferry seem to have hit upon as good means as have yet been discovered for attaining this object. Overflowing congregations are secured by producing sacred dramas after the manner of the old miracle plays. The history of Joseph—fortunately confined to the period of his boyhood—was acted a Sunday or two ago with great success. The play was performed with appropriate costumes, and Joseph had his coat of many colors. There was a good deal of pushing and shoving and "don't I want to see Joseph as well as you's," but nobody wanted to come away, which is certainly unusual "during chapel." At the same enterprising establishment they have dramatised "The Rainbow," where each performer was clad in one of the seven prismatic hues. You have peculiar attractions, I understand, at your camp meetings, but I flatter myself the old country has here set you an example. It completely takes the wind out of the sails of the ritualists; for how can the most be-dizened of churches compare with an acted drama?"

Closing Business.

We regret to see that R. Downey & Bros., contemplate closing their very large and deservedly popular Dry Goods establishment in this town. This business has been carried on for the last fifteen years in a manner that has reflected great credit on its systematic and business like management. The closing down of it will be felt very materially by the farming community and people generally throughout the country. The energy, enterprise and straight forward business character of the firm, is too widely known to need any eulogy from us. We trust that time may brighten and that they may consider it advisable to continue longer in business. A reference to the advertising columns will convince our readers that great bargains are being offered at Downey's for cash.

CLARK'S MILLS,

(From our own Correspondent.)

On Friday evening last, an Oyster Supper was given in the Orange Hall of this village, under the auspices of the Murry Lodge, I. O. G. T. The room was well filled, and the oysters were excellent, and reflect great credit upon the caterers. After ample justice had been done to the good things provided, the cloths were removed, and the W. C. T., Mr. Bell, called the meeting to order. The programme of the evening was varied, and very interesting. The first speaker called upon, was T. W. Casey, Esq., G. W. S., who made a short and humorous speech, which was followed by a song from Miss E. Clarke, who rendered "Under the Daisies" with exceeding good taste. John T. Grange, Esq., M. P. P., next entertained the audience with a neat little speech on the temperance question, he fully concurred in the principles of prohibition, and on that question in the House, he is the right man in the right place. The Rev. G. C. Poyeer, gave a humorous reading, which was received with applause. Mr. Lawless of Hamilton, a prominent member of the order, enlivened the meeting with a few racy observations. The rest of the programme which is too lengthy to enumerate, was of an interesting character. Good services were rendered by the Misses Skinner and Wilson, and Mrs. Sherlock. The entertainment was brought to a close at about 11 p. m., and the funds of the Lodge benefitted by about $15.

The programmes for a Grand Concert, at Napanee Mills, on Friday evening, 22nd inst., by the Sabbath School of that place, have been issued, and judging from the array of talent which will appear on the occasion, we predict one of the most successful entertainments ever given in that village. Mr. B. F. Lewis, the active superintendent of the School, has devoted considerable time and expense in making necessary arrangements, and should be greeted by a full house. A Christmas Tree, loaded with presents for the little ones, will be a prominent feature of the entertainment. Admission 25c.; children 15 cents.

A Silver Mine.

Mr. E. Perry of Tamworth has found a vein of silver of undoubted value on its property in the Township of Barrie. An assay of the ore was made at different place, Boston, England and Nevada, and all gave about the same result,—say $50 worth of silver, and 900 lbs. of lead to the ton of raw ore. The shaft has been sunk to a considerable depth, and the vein grows larger as it goes down. Men of practical experience pronounce it immensely rich. Mr. Perry has had offers of purchase from an English Company as well as from a wealthy miner in America. This mine is located on Marble Lake, and near the famous mountain on Lake Michigamog, visited by some of our own-men some years ago in quest of a vein of silver, said to be located there.

The driver displayed considerable dexterity with the ribbons, and managed to keep her nag in the road, though several times in danger of being apszided and thrown out, by unthinking persons trying to stop the horse blocking the road. When last seen, horse, utter and driver, loomed up beautifully against the western horizon, as the rig assed swiftly over Piety Hill. We have once learned that the above runaway coluded with one of Mr. Blewett's very rigs, and wound up in a general smash. Moral,—The faster we live, the reater the crash, when suddenly brought P.

The Judge, in charging the Grand Jury, said that he had been presented with a blank calander and a pair of white kid gloves, as an indication that there were no criminal cases to occupy the attention of the court. Sometimes it happened that such presentations were made when there were no criminals in gaol, though there were some out on bail, but it was a matter for congratulation that none such were to come before the court at this time. The civil list was also light. There were only five cases, and he expected to be through with the whole of the business in two days. Owing to the holding of trials before the Judge, without a jury, the duties of the Grand Juries were becoming lighter and lighter. He had tried two such cases within the past six months. He would now dismiss them to inspect the gaol and attend to other duties, and would have pleasure in relieving them as soon as they had presented their report. The names of the Petit Jury were then called.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

The business before this Court was short. The Judge invited the Warden of the County and E. Storr, Esq., to seats upon the Bench, and they moved that Division Courts be held in Adolphustown once every three months, and also that the township of Kaladar, &c., be formed into the Seventh Division Court. The Jury Books for 1877 were presented to the Judge, and Proper certificates made.

THE "WITNESS"

Holds a high place in Canadian journalism. Its unsparing course has done more for it than the ability with which it is managed. It has denounced both political parties by turns, as each policy seemed to demand it. At times it has been held to take sides; and again its independence becomes most evident. The work of the good newspaper is to drive out bad reading with better. This the Witness has made its mission. It is eminently a FAMILY PAPER.

Its progress during a year or two past has been most remarkable. The circulation of the WEEKLY WITNESS has, as appears from its prospectus, grown in two years from 17,000 to 26,000.

It progress is largely owing to the enthusiasm awakened by its position with regard to the Ultramontane aggression, so increasingly rampant in the province of Quebec. This feeling went so far as the issue of certain legal proceedings against it—and at the time it underwent the epis-meetings, held in Montreal and many other large cities and towns, with a view to the founding of a testimonial fund. But the best testimonial is the above rapid growth, owing, as it is, largely to the efforts of its readers. The publishers have taken a novel course this year in offering to all who remit ten dollars in new subscriptions a pair of

SELF-ADJUSTING SKATES

of the best make. This skate is a Canadian invention, and of Canadian manufacture, but in all countries looked on as the best; is called the "Eureka," and has become an object of great desire among the younger people. The subscriptions sent in to obtain the skates may be for the WEEKLY, TRI-WEEKLY, or DAILY WITNESS, or for the NEW DOMINION MONTHLY or the NORTHERN MESSENGER.

THE NEW DOMINION MONTHLY—the oldest Canadian Magazine—seems to manifest signs of upward progress, both in circulation and character, and every one in Canada who wishes to see a Canadian Literature developed, must wish it success.

THE MESSENGER'S increase has been the most remarkable of all, its circulation having grown in two years from 20,000 to 50,000. It is a family and Sunday-School paper, containing a very large supply of good family reading, and is excellently illustrated.

Those wishing to work for the prize skates, or for any of a series of money prizes which the WITNESS advertises, should write by the first mail to Messrs. John Dougall & Son, Montreal, for lists of prices and samples of the publications. The prices are as follows:—

DAILY WITNESS, $3.00 per year, including postage.
TRI-WEEKLY, 2.00 " " " "

NEW DOMINION MONTHLY, 1.50 " " " "

COUNTY COUNCIL.

DECEMBER SESSION—FIRST DAY.

The final session of the County Council of Lennox and Addington, for 1876, was commenced in the usual place, on Tuesday afternoon. All the members present; the Warden, John Hogle, Esq., in the Chair.

The Warden called the Council to order, and expressed pleasure at seeing the members again, all apparently enjoying good health. Nothing of interest had occurred since the last meeting. The minutes had been printed and were gotten up in good shape. He might say that the matter of lighting the County buildings with gas would come before the Council, as the town of Napanee had established gas works for the manufacture of gas. His own opinion was that the buildings should be lighted with gas. Of course there would be some expense for fittings and laying the pipes, but after that the gas would be cheaper than oil, and need only be lighted when needed.

The minutes of the last day of the June session were read and confirmed.

Mr. Madden presented a petition from J. Jackson and others asking a grant, by quit claim or otherwise until required, of that part of the County road between Newburgh and the Gore of Ernestown, from lot 12 to lot 16 inclusive.—Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

The Warden read a circular and blank form of a petition to the Legislative Assembly, from Alderman John Hallam, of Toronto, in reference to tax exemption.

Moved by Mr. Dollar sec. by Mr. Wilson, that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Storr, sec. by Mr. Davis, that it be referred to a Special Committee, composed of Messrs J. W. Bell, Spafford, and Wright, with instructions to report as soon as convenient. The amendment was carried, after the mover's name had been added to the Committee.

Mr. Wilson presented a petition from Mr. Bombow and others, asking the Council to open a road in Camden. It being shown that the road was a township line, the petition was not received.

M. J. W. Bell presented a report of the repairs on the bridge at Petworth, and the County's share of the cost, $87.50. He said that the necessary repairs had been extensive; 172 feet in length of 4 inch ash plank covering, at $9 per M., was required; on the south side 240 feet of embankment, in one part about 8 feet high, and a railing on each side of 3x4 scantling, boarded. The material alone costs $117. A breakwater had also been constructed to save one of the piers. Frontenac had voted $100 and had a balance which was expended on the road. After some discussion the report was received and the amount paid.

Mr. Dollar presented the report of the Committee on County Property, stating that the insurance on the County buildings, of $10,000, annual premium $62.50, had expired on the 12th Oct., and had not been renewed, but a new policy taken out in the Scottish Commercial, for three years for $10,000, premium $100

Moved in amendment by Mr. Storr,
sec. by Mr. Davis, that it be referred to a

M. J. W. Bell presented a report of the repairs on the bridge at Petworth, and the County's share of the cost, $87.50.

high, and a railing on each side of 3x4
scantling, boarded. The material alone costs $117. A breakwater had also been taken out in the Scottish Commercial, for three years for $10,000, premium $100 thereby effecting a saving of $87.50. The report was received and adopted.

THE "WITNESS"
is a high place in Canadian journalism. Its

MAKING THINGS COMFORTABLE.

The winters in this country are becoming so severe, and the winds so high and trying to animal organisms, that it is necessary for human ingenuity to devise every expedient possible to maintain the animal temperature. The essentials to the creation and preservation of animal heat are—a plenty of carbonaceous food and protection from the cold atmosphere and chilling winds by warm dwellings, for man and beast, comfortable clothing, &c.

Few farm-houses are so warm that considerable cold can be excluded by banking up the cellar, listing the doors and windows, repairing and reglazing some of the window lights, and perhaps building temporary storm-houses over some of the more exposed outside doors. All these things the farmer, or his sons, or hired men, can do with but little outlay. The cellar should be made frost-proof against the lowest temperature that will be in any probability reached and then, if provided with such ventilators that it can be kept pure and very near the freezing point all the time, it will be a suitable depository for fruits and vegetables.

A cellar properly constructed is frost-proof without banking, but we know that a majority of our farm dwellings were cheaply built, by those whose means would not warrant large outlays, and consequently the inmates are obliged to make the best of such they have. We hope that a proper regard for appearances and the olfactory nerves of the family, will deter farmers from that oldtime practice of banking up the house with barn-yard manure. Dirt may not be quite so warm, but if enough is used it will prove an efficient protection, be much more tidy, and less odorous.

But the barn, as well as the house, needs to be made more comfortable. A large proportion of farm barns are built upon a low wall without any cellar, and there are generally numerous spaces between wall and sill, through which the wind can blow, and, rising through apertures in the floor, beat upon the animals. These can be closed by banking up the barn. Manure would be more tolerable here than around the house. Cracks in the siding of the barn can be stopped by nailing on narrow strips, and they would be less unsightly inside than outside. It might pay to board up the stable, on the inside, and fill the space between with cut straw. Farmers should bear in mind that everything done to make the quarters of animals more comfortable will reduce the amount of food necessary to be consumed for fuel to sustain the vital heat, and as the amount that an animal can consume and digest is limited, whatever is saved as fuel will be added as fat, or enter into the composition of milk, wool, eggs, &c.

We generally give our horses the warmest quarters, but cows and fattening cattle are nearly as sensitive as horses; sheep need some protection, especially against wet, and fowls are about the only domestic animal that ever freeze to death. Swine are exceedingly sensitive to the cold, and we doubt if any money is ever made on pork unless the pig sty is warm, for the very material consumed by the hog as fuel would make pork and lard.

We see that it is a question of economy as well as humanity. No humane man will see his domestic animals suffer when it is in his power to relieve them, and no economical man would, knowingly, feed hay, grain and roots to stock to supply the warmth that could be as well supplied by comfortable barns and stables.

Our first aim with our stock, and also with ourselves, should be to retain within the body as much of the animal heat as possible, by comfortable barns and dwellings, and warm clothing and bedding, and our next should be to furnish an abundance of good economical food to

WHAT KIND OF BARN.

The old method of making hay was to let it lie out several days and keep it continually stirring until it was thoroughly dry, and had more the semblance of clips than grass. The improved practice is to cut with a machine, ted it a few times, and draw it to the barn the same day. If such wilted grass is now allowed to get wet, it is found to keep quite as well as the former dried hay, especially is this the case where the barns are comparatively tight. Recent experiments are reported, in which the freshly cut grass—cut after the dew was off—was allowed the sun but a couple of hours, during which the tedder went over it once, and was then raked up and housed in a building clapboarded, tight beneath, plastered inside, and with slight ventilation, which was at once closed tight and not opened till winter, when the grass came out fresh and bright as the day it was put in. A farmer on the Berkshire hills had a short hay crop which he determined to make go as far as possible. His barn was well sheathed, without cracks. The grass was all cut early, just before blossoming, and housed the same day as cut. While carting the hay to the barn doors were kept closed, save to admit the teams, which were unloaded with the doors shut. Access of air was prevented so far as possible thenceforth. The hay was closely packed in the mows. The testimony of the farmer and all his neighbors is that this crop of hay was brighter and fresher the next winter, and was more nutritious—the cattle eating less of it—than any previous crop. We might cite numerous similar examples. There is nothing in this contrary to science or sense. The over-heating of hay will only take place by the action of the oxygen of the air in the presence of moisture. Remove either and the heat will not occur. Remove the moisture and the grass becomes dry hay, less digestible, and minus some of its nutritive and aromatic qualities. It is better economy to keep out excess of oxygen, and have cured grass for fodder. There is a great saving of labor too in housing hay the same day as cut, which of itself is a strong argument for the system. Every wetting by dew, every hour's sun after the grass is wilted, lessens the value of the fodder. We can take advantage of the idea by providing tight barns, and keeping them closed until the hay has gone through its "sweat," which is a slight fermentation which drives off excess of moisture without injury to the hay, if excess of oxygen is not permitted in the meantime. - Scientific Farmer.

BEAU IDEAL OF A DUTCH COW.

"A 'beste koe' must show a finely moulded head; large nostrils; thin, transparent horns; a clear bright eye; thin, large, and not excessively wrinkled eyelids; rose-colored inner membranes of the eye; purely red lachrymal glands; a kind, mild countenance; blue nose; thin neck; free respiration; fine bones; well formed body, with rather broad hind parts; straight back; long, thin tail; round but moderately bent ribs; developed belly; stout, yet not heavy legs; smooth joints, thin, mellow, movable skin; soft hair; delicately haired, broad and drooping udder; four well formed dark-colored teats; well developed milk and blood-vessels; vessels on the belly and about the udder to be proportionately broad and vigorous, and of a wen-like swell, and the vessel of the udder and inner hams to spread net-like, the openings through which the milk and blood vessels enter the body to be large and roomy. A cow thus formed is apt to show a perfect escutcheon."—Charles Muzler, U. S. Consul at Amsterdam.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—An inquest was held this forenoon on the body of Guy Symington, fireman on G. W. R., who was killed in the yard last night under the following circumstances:—His engine returned from Sarnia at midnight and was backing to the round house, when deceased went to the rear of the tender to get something from his store box. While doing so he slipped and fell on the track the engine passing over him. His skull was broken his left arm cut off about the shoulder and his left leg fractured at the thigh. He lived but five minutes and begged to be put out of pain. He was a native of Bothwell, where his father is employed on the line. He was an odd fellow, a temperate man and much respected. Verdict was returned of Accidental death, no blame attaching to any one.

The action of President Grant in sending to Congress a message containing Sherman's report of the proceedings of the Louisiana Reforming Board has excited the deepest indignation among the Democrats. In the House, Wood, of New York, denounced the President's action in sending down such a partizan statement, and moved that the message be laid on the table which was carried by a vote of 153 to 98. At a caucus of Democratic members great indignation was manifested. It was alleged that the President had interfered with the freedom of election by sending troops to the Southern States, and his action in sending Sherman's report to Congress was characterized as an attempt to forestall the judgement of the Houses, for which, it was alleged, he ought to be impeached.

CATARRH

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may
know something of the merits of your CONSTI-TUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-nine years old; had been out of health for about
five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continuing droppings in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to entire hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.
Yours truly HENRY NIDER,

MAKING EYES.

So many things a girl can make
I cannot fathom why
So few can turn us out a cake,
Or make an apple pie;
Excuses they can make, galore
Fair bouquets, wreaths, and ti
But they delight in something,
An that is "making eyes."

A girl can make a man a fool—
See history for the proof—
Can make a dress by fashion's
Or trim a daisy chain
But oft—from some new
I've pondered with surprise
On this: her rarest, dearest art
You know, is "making eyes."

A woman makes the moments
She makes the cash fly, too;
For husbands say she makes the
Whatever comes in view;
But this I know, O Modern Be
It is no vain surmise—
The art in which you most excel
Is that of "making eyes."

MAKING EYES.

So many things a girl can make,
I cannot fathom why
So few can turn us out a cake,
Or make an apple pie;
Excuses they can make, galore,
Fair bouquets, wreaths, and ties;
But they delight in something more,
An that is "making eyes."

A girl can make a man a fool—
See history for that—
Can make a dress by fashion's rule,
Or trim a daily hat—
But oft—from common sense—
I've pondered with surprise
On this: her rarest, dearest art,
You know, is "making eyes."

A woman makes the moments fly—
She makes the cash fly, too;
For husbands say she makes them buy
Whatever comes in view;
But this I know, O Modern Belle—
It is no vain surmise—
The art in which you most excel
Is that of "making eyes."

GEORGE'S THANKSGIVING.

BY C. E. SHEERATT.

How dark it was! and the fire all out
too, with not one stick of wood to build
another; and to add to the dreariness
great gusts of wind came sweeping down
the chimney and rattled the windows,
and shook the door.

"How dark it is," whispered little Winnie, a child of four, as she crept to
her brother George, some two years
older. "Won't mamma never come?"

"Yes, Minnie," replied her brother,
"but see how fast it snows. We can scarcely see Judge Rapson's on the hill.
Guess they must be having nice times up
there. For Jim told me they were going to have a Thanksgiving supper, and that Colonel or Captain, or somebody, was
coming home, and that he had been gone,
Oh! ever so many years,—ever since he
was a little boy like me, I guess,—and
the Judge never knew where he was, and
was away ever and ever so many miles, all the time; in China, may be,
and now he is coming home to spend Thanksgiving."

"But what is fanksgiving? I never had any fanksgiving supper!"

"No, you little goose, 'cause we're too
poor. Jim said they had killed lots of chickens and turkeys, and was going to
have plum-pudding and everything nice,
and that's why mamma stays so long;
then I guess they all give thanks to God
for giving them so many nice things for supper."

"May be Dad will tell them to send us
some. I should like some pudding with raisins in it; wouldn't you George?" Let's ask Him and see."

"But I haven't any supper to thank him for," replied George. Then a vision
of all the good things came up before
him, he added,— "May be He will.
We'll ask Him and see. Papp is in

Him all about it."

good-looking girl and had several beaux.
The one that took my fancy most, was a young minister, a very promising young man, remarkable plans and steady. He thought a great deal of me, and I kind of took a fancy to him, and things ran on until we were engaged. One evening he came to me—I remember it as well as if it were only yesterday. When he came into the parlor where I was alone, he came up to me, and—but now, pshaw!
I don't like to tell the rest."

"Oh, Aunt Sallie, for mercy's sake
don't stop; tell us what he did."
"Well, as I said when he came up to me, and put his arms around me, and rather hugged me, I got excited and
some flustered; it was a long time ago,
and I don't know but I might hugged him back a little. Then I felt—but just clear out, now, every one of you; I shan't tell you any more."

"Goodness, gracious, do, Aunt Sallie;
tell us how you felt. Didn't you feel good? And what did he do next?"

"Oh, such torments as you are! I
was like any other girl, pretty soon I
pretended to be mad about it, and pushed him away, though I wasn't a bit mad.
You must know that the house where I lived was on one of the back streets of
the town. They were glass doors in the parlor, which opened right over the street,
and no balcony nor anything of the kind
in front of the house. As it was in the summer season, these two doors were opened and the shutters drawn to."

"I stepped a little from him, when he edged up so close I pushed him again. I pushed harder than I intended to, and
don't you think, girls, the poor fellow
lost his balance and fell through one of the doors into the street. As he fell I gave a scream and caught him—but I
declare, I won't tell anything more."

"Yes, yes, Aunt Sallie; how did you
catch him? Did it hurt him much?"

"Well, if I must, I must. He fell
head first, and as he was going, I caught
him by the legs of his trousers. I held
on for a minute and tried to pull him
back, but his suspenders gave way, and
the poor fellow fell clear out of his pan-
taloon, into a parcel of ladies and gentlemen passing along the street."

"Oh, Aunt, Aunt, Lordy, Lordy!"

"There, that's right, squall and giggle
as much as you want to. Girls that can't hear a little like that without tearing
around the room and he-he-ing in such a way, don't know enough to come home
when it rains. A nice time the man who marries one of you will have, won't he?
—catch me telling you anything again."

"But, Aunt Sallie, what became of him? Didn't you ever see him again?"

"No; the moment he touched the
ground he got up, and left that place in a hurry. I tell you it was a sight to be remembered to see how that man did run.
Father happened to be coming up the
street at that time, and he said he never saw anything to equal in his life. I heard
he did the fastest running ever
known in that part of the country, and
that he never stopped or looked behind him until he was two miles out of

A HORRIBLE STORY.

A MANUFACTORY OF CRIPPLES.

When Victor Hugo published that most ghastly of all modern romances,
"L'Homme Qui Rit," the ground work
of the story was denounced as an atrocious fable. The hero of the "Man Who Laughs" was described as a miserable child stolen from his parents, who had in early youth been disfigured most awfully in order to render him an object of charity, and who had been forced to prosecute the trade of mendicancy until he had effected his escape from his masters. Apocryphal as the story read, it was true.

The great French novelist barely exceeds the facts of the case when he created the character of the horrible disfigured hero of the story, and the trade which flourished at the period at which he laid
the scene of his romance is by no means dead to-day.

Some months ago Prof. Ember of the Medical College at Prague, applied to the Austrian Chief of Police at Vienna for assistance in ferretting out and bringing to justice the most monstrous society of criminals ever existed. The required support was extended him, and the patient work of an experienced detective,
added to that of the Professor himself, eventually achieved the desired end. A month ago a body of police made a descent upon the headquarters of the criminals, and their trial, at present
pending in the Imperial courts.

The story which the facts elicited by this trial tell us is worthy of a place in Dante's "Inferno." The wildest dream of a demented nightmare never painted
a picture so fraught with horror.

On the first day of the trial a howling
mob endeavored to tear the malefactors
piecemeal, and it was only found possible
to continue the investigation by garrisoning the courtroom with soldiers, and calling out two regiments of horses to protect the criminals on their way from the court to their prison.

Rodna, the chief city of Central Hungary, is the scene of a continuous pilgrimage. The cathedral of the city possessed as relics the bones of St. Nepo-muck, and the yearly sum of pious visitors to their shrine numbers hundreds of thousands. As a natural consequence of this heavy foreign visit, the town swarms
with beggars, who are reported to be the most miserable and hideously deformed
in the world. Men, women and children,
in all degrees of terrible mutilation,
exhibit their crippled forms and appeal
for charity, and the pilgrims who believe that by honoring their claims
they will command the prayers of the unfortunate mendicants, rarely refused to gratify them.

Prof. Ember, on his return from a geological tour in the interior of the Empire, spent two days in Rodna during the early part of last summer. A daily visitor at his inn was a young girl of sixteen, of remarkable beauty, who had lost
her right leg, and who usually took her
stand in the courtyard at early morning
and remained there until late in the

GEORGE'S THANKSGIVING.

BY C. H. SHEPHERD.

How dark it was! and the fire all out
too, with not one stick of wood to build
another; and to add to the dreariness
great gusts of wind came sweeping down
the chimney and rattled the windows,
and shook the door.

"How dark it is," whispered little Winnie, a child of four, as she crept to
her brother George, some two years
older. "Won't mamma never come?"

"Yes, Minnie," replied her brother,
"but see how fast it snows. We can
scarcely see Judge Rapson's on the hill.
Guess they must be having nice times up
there. For Jim told me they were going to have a Thanksgiving supper, and that Colonel or Captain, or somebody, was
coming home, and that he had been gone,
Oh! ever so many years,—ever since he
was a little boy like me, I guess,—and
the Judge never knew where he was, and
he was away ever and ever so many miles, all the time; in China, I guess,
and now he is coming home to spend Thanksgiving."

"But what is fanksgiving? I never
had any fanksgiving supper!"

"No, you little goose, 'cause we're too
poor. Jim said they had killed lots of
chickens and turkeys, and was going to
have plum-pudding and everything nice,
and that's why mamma stays so long;
then I guess they all give thanks to God
for giving them so many nice things for
supper."

"May be Dad will tell them to send us
some. I should like some pudding with raisins in it; wouldn't you George? Let's
ask him and see."

"But I haven't any supper to thank
him for," replied George. Then a vision
of all the good things came up before
him, he added,— "May be He will.
We'll ask him and see. Papp is in heaven, you know, and I guess he'll tell
him all about it."

So hand in hand they knelt together
before the hearth and its few remaining coals, and in childish language told God of all they wanted, ending by asking for a
"big" turkey, and a pudding with "lots"
of raisins in it.

Now, it so chanced that when the Judges' only son left home ten years before, that cottage was the home he left,
not the mansion on the hill-side; and there, as he left the stage at the "Corners" he wended his way, half blinded by wind and snow; only to see in the dim fire-light two childish figures and heard their little prayer; and when they told God what nice things the rich Judge and his only son were going to have, he hastily drew his hands across his eyes and whispered softly, "Amen."

Great was their surprise when a little later the Judge's sleigh, with his magnificent black steeds, came dashing up to the door, bells and all, and the Judge was there too.

"Come to take them home with him,"
he said.

George danced with delight, clapped
his hands and hurrahed for the Judge,
and Thanksgiving, wishing it came twice a year, and Minnie as she nestled her curly head on Colonel Ranson's shoulder, rubbed her sleepy eyes and said, "she dreamed she was in heaven, and her papa
'ooke like him, and they were ringing the bells for fanksgiving supper."

It was a happy household that assembled around the table that night.
Father and son re-united after a separation of ten years. The widow and the orphans made happy. Many were the Thanksgivings that ascends to the One who doeth all things well. The stern, iron-hearted Judge's heart was softened, and in his humiliation he bowed his head and said: "Great God I thank Thee."

And the children never went back to

"Goodness, gracious do, Aunt Sallie;
tell us how you felt. Didn't you feel
good? And what did he do next?"

"Oh, such torments as you are! I
was like any other girl, pretty soon I
pretended to be mad about it, and push-
ed him away, though I wasn't a bit mad.
You must know that the house where I
lived was on one of the back streets of
the town. They were glass doors in the parlor, which opened right over the street,
and no balcony nor anything of the kind
in front of the house. As it was in the summer season, these two doors were
opened and the shutters drawn to."

"I stepped a little from him, when he edged up so close I pushed him again. I pushed harder than I intended to, and
don't you think, girls, the poor fellow
lost his balance and fell through one of
the doors into the street. As he fell I gave a scream and caught him—but I
declare, I won't tell anything more."

"Yes, yes, Aunt Sallie; how did you
catch him? Did it hurt him much?"

"Well, if I must, I must. He fell
head first, and as he was going, I caught
him by the legs of his trousers. I held
on for a minute and tried to pull him
back, but his suspenders gave way, and
the poor fellow fell clear out of his pan-
taloons, into a parcel of ladies and gentle-
men passing along the street."

"Oh, Auntie, Auntie, Lordy, Lordy!"

"There, that's right, squall and giggle
as much as you want to. Girls that can't hear a little like that without tearing
around the room and he-he-ing in such a
way, don't know enough to come home
when it rains. A nice time the man who
marries one of you will have, won't he?
—catch me telling you anything again."

"But, Aunt Sallie, what became of him? Didn't you ever see him again?"

"No; the moment he touched the
ground he got up, and left that place in a hurry. I tell you it was a sight to be remembered to see how that man did run.
Father happened to be coming up the
street at that time, and he said he never
saw anything to equal in his life. I heard
he did the fastest running ever
known in that part of the country, and
that he never stopped or looked behind him until he was two miles out of town. He sent me a note a day or two afterwards, saying that the engagement must be broken off, as he could never look me in the face again after what had happened. He went out West and I believe is preaching in Illinois. But he never married. He was so modest, and I suppose he was so frightened that time,
that he never dared to trust himself with a woman again. That girls, is the reason I never married. I felt very bad about it for a long time, for he was a real good man; and I have often thought we should always have been happy if his suspenders hadn't given way."

WOMAN'S POWER.

"Man is what a woman makes him,"
said Rorseau, himself a respecter of the sex; and the records of history contain numberless examples of women who have supported their husbands or brothers in the crises of their lives.

John Stuart Mill said that he owed everything that was excellent in his writings to the influence of his wife. Thos.
Carlyle gives similar testimony. John Flaxman, the sculptor, had made a considerable progress in his work when he married Annie Denman, a noble-spirited intelligent woman, full of love for art,
and with an intense admiration for him
as an artist.

It happened that soon after the event that he met Sir Joshua Reynolds, in whose opinion no man could ever become an artist who did not devote himself entirely to art, and who had not studied patiently and reverentially the works of the great masters in Italy itself. He bluntly told Flaxman that he was ruined for an artist. Flaxman went straight to his wife, and said to her:

"Annie, I am ruined for an artist."
"Who has ruined you, John?" she asked.

her right leg, and who usually took her

and remained there until late in the

and misfortune of the poor creature excited the Professor's sympathy, and he summoned her to his room. She came and was presented by him with a liberal gratitude. She had, according to her own account, been a cripple from early childhood, and from her respectable appearance in the case of this young lady, this assertion seemed a likely one.

During the recital of her own history
she mentioned a number of other unfortunate like herself and told the Professor that they lived together in an open
in the suburbs, kept by a blind man named Clapin Trouleson.

This pauper hostelry the Professor
visited that night under the guidance of
his mutilated protegee, and the discoveries
he made there led to his application to
the Imperial police, and the consequent
trial to which we have alluded.

The tavern of the "Golden Omelette"
is situated close under the fortification
walls of the city of Rodna. Its proprietor, Trouleson, is a man of gigantic stature, an old soldier of the Austrian
army, who was blinded by an explosion
of a cannon while firing a salute from the forts at Trieste.

Returning to his native city with his
mistress, a fine-looking Russian woman
of the Volga, he started the house of call
for beggars, which he, up to a few weeks
ago, directed and made money out of.
The house is a long, low, rambling structure,—a nondescript of brick, stone, and
wood,—and when depended on by the police served as shelter for nearly two hundred men women, and children, all of whom, with the exception of perhaps a dozen, were professional beggars. Upon the arrest of its host, he was discovered
to be worth, in money deposited in the Imperial Bank, over $100,000,—an enormous fortune for the country in which he lived. How this money was obtained is the crowning horror of the entire affair.

strange how the Judge forgot to scold
when he could not find his gold spectacles
any where, until he espied little Minnie perched up in his great arm-chair, with his best pen, and writing in one of his new law books too, or when she smoothed
his hair, now fast growing gray, forgetting to wash her molasses candy fingers;
for, need I tell you, the Judge forgave
all, and forgot when he welcomed, as his daughter the widow James, that she was the same Nellie he had refused to call daughter, ten years before, because she was the daughter of a poor man.
Reader do you see any moral? In your happiness do not forget to make others happy, and remember that wealth does not always bring happiness.
Let each Thanksgiving be a thanksgiving
to the one who doeth all things well.

WHY AUNT SALLIE NEVER GOT MARRIED.
"Now, Aunt Sallie, do please tell us
why you never got married. You know you said once that when you were a girl
you were engaged to a minister, and promised you would tell us about it sometime. Now, Aunt, please do."
"Well, if ever I did see such girls in my born days. It's tease, tease, from morning till night; you must know all about everything you have no businas to know anything about. Such inquisitive, pestiferous critters as you are! When I was young, girls were different; they minded their business, and didn't go sailing round with a whole string of beaux,
getting their heads filled with all kinds of nonsense. I never dared to ask any of my aunts, married or single, about any of their affairs. Pretty mess I'd got into if I had. When they offered to tell me anything of their own accord, I kept my mouth shut and listened. Everthing is different nowadays; young folks have no respect for their elders. But as I see I'm not going to have any peace till I tell you why, just listen, and don't let me hear a word out of your mouths, till I get through."
"That's right, Aunt Sallie, go right ahead, do, and we will keep perfectly still."
"Well, you see when I was about seventeen years old, I was living in Utica in the State of New York.—

"It happened in church," he replied:
"And Annie Denman has done it."
He then told her what Sir Joshua had said, and added:—
"I should like to have been a great artist."
"And so you shall be, and go to Rome,
too, if that will make one," said the resolute woman. "We will work and economize. I will never have it said that Anne Denman ruined John Flaxman
for an artist."
And so the brave couple did work and economize. They worked patiently and hopefully for five years, never asked help from any one, never mentioned their intentions to any one, and at last went together to Rome, where Flaxman studied and worked to such purpose that he achieved both fame and competency.
His success was not shared to the full,
however, by the faithful wife, for she died many years before him.
Thomas Hood gave a touching tribute to his wife's excellence:—
"I never was anything till I knew you and I have been a better, happier, and more prosperous man ever since. Whatever may befall me, the wife of my bosom will have the acknowledgment of her tenderness, worth and excellence
from my pen."
Many other instances might be enumerated; but we have touched upon sufficient to prove that a good wife is God's best gift to man.
ATTEMPTED SUICIDE BY TWO LOVELORN GIRLS.
MONTREAL, Dec 20.—Catherine McDonald, 18, came this morning to the police station, Chaboillez Square,
and reported that she and another girl had attempted to poison
themselves by taking acetate of lead.
She was sick and a doctor was consequently called in, who prescribed remedies and had the girl removed to the hospital. The name of the other girl was learned to be Mary Kelly. She is said to have expected the poison after taking it, and was found, on being visited
by the police, to be only slightly indisposed. It seems one of the girls lived in Bleury street, and the other in Roy Lane,
and they went together and engaged a room at the New York Hotel, Chaboillez Square. The cause of the act on the part of the girls was disappointment in love.
The parties are working girls.

assertion seemed a likely one.
During the recital of her own history
she mentioned a number of other unfortunates like herself and told the Professor that they lived together in an open
in the suburbs, kept by a blind man named Clapin Troulleson.
This pauper hostelry the Professor
visited that night under the guidance of
his mutilated protege, and the discoveries
he made there led to his application to
the Imperial police, and the consequent
trial to which we have alluded.
The tavern of the "Golden Omelette"
is situated close under the fortification
walls of the city of Radna. Its proprietor, Troulleson, is a man of gigantic
stature, an old soldier of the Austrian
army, who was blinded by an explosion
of a cannon while firing a salute from the
forts at Trieste.
Returning to his native city with his
mistress, a fine-looking Russian woman
of the Volga, he started the house of call
for beggars, which he, up to a few weeks
ago, directed and made money out of.
The house is a long, low, rambling structure,—a nondescript of brick, stone, and
wood,—and when decended on by the police served as shelter for nearly two hundred men women, and children, all of

the arrest of his host, he was discovered
to be worth, in money deposited in the Imperial Bank, over $100,000,—an enormous fortune for the country in which he lived. How this money was obtained is
the crowning horror of the entire affair.
Antoine Cherguille, nicknamed "The Player," is the brother of Troulleson's mistress. Among the frequenters of the "Golden Omelette" he is called the Oper-ateur." He is a man of over fifty, and for the last thirty years of his life has been engaged in the business of manufacturing cripples. From the evidence given at the trial, which is likely to send him to the guillotine, his method of procedure is as follows:—
The members of a gang of kidnappers,
organized by his sister and her sightless
paramour, have for the last twenty years
been engaged in stealing children from the various cities of the Empire. These unfortunate little ones were brought to the headquarters at Radna, where they passed into the merciless hands of the "opérateur."
He took charge of them in a separate section of the inn, where, assisted by a couple of surgeons, whose vices had reduced them to his own level, and by his own knowledge of anatomy—for he had studied the art itself in his youth—he evolved the terribly crippled spectres who have so long pestered the pilgrims of St.
Nepomuck. At the time of his arrest
three children, in various stages of convalescence from mutilation, were found on the filthy cots of this demoniac hospital.
One of them, a pretty girl of five, had her right hand amputated. The other two, both boys, had lost their hands and feet respectively. In a pit under the floor, in one corner of the torture-chamber, were found the putrefying remnants of a dozen human members, buried in a compost of chloride of lime and quicklime. Cherguille manifested no emotion
upon his arrest, but utterly refused to refuse to render any information and has been obstinately silent since.
At the time the arrest was made the business of the infamous den was in full blast. In the long common room a hundred miserable wrecks of humanity, armless, legless, handless, footless, blind and awfully disfigured, congregated about long tables. The smoke of their pipes welled the scene, the reek of their foul meal tainted the air, and the clattering of their crutches, the curses, shrieks, and loud conversation all about deafened the ordinary ear. Upon the entrance of the detectives they merely looked up, and noting the artfully disguised figures, looking for strange beggars, and continued
their orgie without honoring them with any further attention. The house had been surrounded with a double cordon

SKATING.

BY CARDWICK AND WALKER.

A HORRIBLE STORY.

A MANUFACTORY OF CRIPPLES.

When Victor Hugo published that most ghastly of all modern romances, "L'Homme Qui Rit," the ground work of the story was denounced as an atrocious fable. The hero of the "Man Who Laughs" was described as a miserable child stolen from his parents, who had in early youth been disfigured most awfully in order to render him an object of charity, and who had been forced to prosecute the trade of mendicancy until he had effected his escape from his masters. Apocryphal as the story read, it was true.

The great French novelist barely exceeds the facts of the case when he created the character of the horrible disfigured hero of the story, and the trade which flourished at the period at which he laid the scene of his romance is by no means dead to-day.

Some months ago Prof. Ember of the Medical College at Prague, applied to the Austrian Chief of Police at Vienna for assistance in ferreting out and bringing to justice the most monstrous society of criminals ever existed. The required support was extended him, and the patient work of an experienced detective, added to that of the Professor himself, eventually achieved the desired end. A month ago a body of police made a descent upon the headquarters of the criminals, and their trial is at present pending in the Imperial courts.

The story which the facts elicited by this trial tell us is worthy of a place in Dante's "Inferno." The wildest dream of a disturbed nightmarer never painted a picture so fraught with horror.

On the first day of the trial a howling mob endeavored to tear the malefactors piecemeal, and it was only found possible to continue the investigation by garrisoning the courtroom with soldiers, and calling out two regiments of horses to protect the criminals on their way from the court to their prison.

Rodna, the chief city of Central Hungary, is the scene of a continuous pilgrimage. The cathedral of the city possesses as relics the bones of St. Nepomuck, and the yearly sum of pious visitors to their shrine numbers hundreds of thousands. As a natural consequence of this heavy foreign visit, the town swarms with beggars, who are reported to be the most miserable and hideously deformed in the world. Men, women and children, in all degrees of terrible mutilation, exhibit their crippled forms and appeal for charity, and the pilgrims, who believe that by honoring their claims they will command the prayers of the unfortunate mendicants, rarely refused to gratify them.

Prof. Ember, on his return from a geological tour in the interior of the Empire, spent two days in Rodna during the early part of last summer. A daily visitor at his inn was a young girl of sixteen, of remarkable beauty, who had lost her right leg, and who usually took her stand in the courtyard at early morning of police, and at an appointed signal the neccent was made. The result was that all the frequenters of the place were seized, with one exception. This, singularly enough, was a man without legs, who managed to conceal himself in the cellar, and eventually made his escape.

The prisoners were at once loaded into a special train and conveyed to Vienna. There the promise of pardon induced a number of them to a series of confessions. The art of crippling children was, it seems, not the only one practiced by the "operator." More than once poor innocents had been wilfully blinded by the atrocious torturer, and at the trial three such victims of his infamous business were produced. The money gained by these children was divided between Cherguille and his sister and her paramour. The unfortunate little ones were closely watched, and no avenue of escape left open to them.

That the circumstances of the case were not altogether unknown to the authorities at Rodna is patent from the fact that the Mayor and two other officials have been arrested for accepting bribes to hush the matter up.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR DAUGHTERS.

Apropos of what Mrs. Livermore's late lecture on the above import nt question, said, the Davenport Democrat tips sensibly makes answer :

- Teach them self-reliance.
- Teach them to make bread.
- Teach them to make shirts.
- Teach them not to wear false hair.
- Teach them not to paint and powder.
- Teach them to wear thick warm shoes.
- Teach them how to wash and iron clothes.
- Bring them up to do marketing for the family.
- Teach them how to make their own dresses.
- Teach them how to cook a good meal of victuals.
- Teach them that a dollar is only a hundred cents.
- Teach them to wear calico dresses—and do it like a queen.
- Teach them to say no, and mean it ; or yes and stick to it.
- Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons.
- Teach them to regard the morals, not the money of beaux.
- Give them a good substantial common school education.
- Teach them every day, dry, hard practical common sense.
- Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining room and parlor.
- Teach them that a good round rosey romp is worth fifty delicate consumptives.
- Teach them to have nothing to do with intemperance and dissolute young men.

I held them a minute and tried to pull him up, but his suspenders gave way, and the fellow fell clear out of his pants into a parcel of ladies and gentlemen along the street."

Aunt, Aunt, Lordy, Lordy ! re, that's right, a squall and giggle as you want to. Girls that can't little like that without tearing the room and he-he-ing in such a way, I don't know enough to come home. A nice time the man who one of you will have, won't he ? me telling you anything again."

Aunt Sallie, what became of him ? Didn't you ever see him again ?

At the moment he touched the ground, he got up, and left that place in a

The large outside backward roll is attained by a run, when the skater, having gained all the impulse he can, strikes on the outside forward of the right leg, turns the 3, and immediately puts down the left on the outside back. He then, without further efforts, flies rapidly over the ice ; the left arm being raised, the head turned over the right shoulder, and the right foot turned out and pointed.

It must be evident that the elements described may be combined and varied infinitely. Hence waltz and quadrille skating, &c., which may be described as combinations of 8's, outside backwards, &c.

Any one who can do the "back cross-roll" properly may count himself a good skater. There are many who can do all the preceding figures successfully and yet find the back cross-roll quite an obstacle in the way of further progress.

One cause of failure is that too great an impetus is given to the body at the start ; indeed, it may be accepted as a rule in all figure-skating, that the best skaters use the least force. A really good skater will continue to execute figures for an hour at a time, and none but a very practiced eye can tell by what force he is impelled. In fact, the position of the head is the great secret in these delicate maneuvers ; the difference of an inch in its attitude making just the difference between a large or small circle.

It should be remembered that the figure three is the skater's great reservoir of power. Whenever he finds himself in want of a little more impetus, he cuts a three, and by bearing a little forward at the twist gains enough power for a large figure.

There is a rather neat variation of the back cross-roll which is done as follows : Two skaters stand opposite each other and hold hands. They then begin to start on the cross-roll, one going backward and the other forward. Both, of course, must keep the most exact time, and a tolerable large piece of ice is required for them to display themselves to advantage.

The perfection of the back cross-roll is exhibited when a skater can cut the figure eight on the outside edge backward keeping his knees straight and his hand quiet.

The national bird, from whose contour this figure derives its name, is any thing but graceful in aspect on the ice ; but as some fancy it we briefly refer to the movement. In making this figure the skater places his heels together as nearly on a line as possible, the points of the skates being, of course, turned in opposite directions, with the knees bent at nearly right angles. The line of direction must be accurately taken and the weight thrown on the back foot. The greatest feat in the spread-eagle line is achieved by pressing the toes out and throwing the weight of the body back so as to rest on the outside edges.

A daily visitor at his inn was a young girl of sixteen, of remarkable beauty, who had lost her right leg, and who usually took her stand in the courtyard at early morning and remained there until late in the afternoon soliciting charity. The beauty and misfortune of the poor creature excited the Professor's sympathy, and he summoned her to his room. She came and was presented by him with a liberal gratuity. She had, according to her own account, been a cripple from early childhood, and from her remarkable story in the loss of her single limb, and assertion seemed a likely one.

During the recital of her own history she mentioned a number of other unfortunates like herself and told the Professor that they lived together in an open in the suburbs, kept by a blind man named Clapin Trouilleison.

This pauper hostelry the Professor visited that night under the guidance of his mutilated protegee, and the discoveries he made there led to his application to the Imperial police, and the consequent trial to which we have alluded.

The tavern of the "Golden Omelette" is situated close under the fortification walls of the city of Rodna. Its proprietor, Trouilleison, is a man of gigantic stature, an old soldier of the Austrian army, who was blinded by an explosion of a cannon while firing a salute from the forts at Trieste.

Returning to his native city with his mistress, a fine-looking Russian woman of the Volga, he started the house of call for beggars, which he, up to a few weeks ago, directed and made money out of. The house is a long, low, rambling structure, a nondescript of brick, stone, and wood,—and when decended on by the police served as shelter for nearly two hundred men women, and children, all of whom, with the exception of perhaps a dozen, were professional beggars. Upon the arrest of his host, he was discovered to be worth, in money deposited in the Imperial Bank, over $100,000,—an enormous fortune for the country in which he lived. How this money was obtained is the crowning horror of the entire affair.

Mr. Spurgeon is a very hard-working man, his time being spent in moving quickly to and from the Tabernacle, the Pastors' college, the schools, almshouses and orphanages of which he is the guiding spirit. He passes his life when not actually preaching or working, in a pony chaise, varied by an occasional hansom cab. Wrapped in a rough blue overcoat, with a species of soft deer-stalker had on his head, a loose black necktie round his massive throat, and a cigar burning merrily in his mouth, he is surely the most clerical of all preachers of the gospel. Yet that short, thickly-built man, with the shock head of hair hardly yet touched with grey, with ample brown beard covering his heavy jaw, and a thin line of moustache covering his capacious mouth, is the famous preacher for whom, when yet a very young man, no building could be found sufficient to hold his congregation. One plan he has ever pursu-

an figure-skating, that the best skaters use the least force. A really good skater will continue to execute figures for an hour at a time, and none but a very practiced eye can tell by what force he is impelled. In fact, the position of the head is the great secret in these delicate maneuvers ; the difference of an inch in its attitude making just the difference between a large or small circle.

The line of direction must be accurately taken and the weight thrown on the back foot. The greatest feat in the spread-eagle line is achieved by pressing the toes out and throwing the weight of the body back so as to rest on the outside edges.

THE DANCING FIGURES.

The waltz step is a very pretty one in figure-skating. It is performed by cutting a small three, and instead of coming round on the inside edge, finishing the twist on the outside edge of the other skate. Exact step is required, or both parties will be likely to "hear something drop."

The quadrille, when gracefully and properly done, is the most attractive dancing figure of all. In making a set the skater most familiar with the several movements should be appointed director

The figure that is cut in the ice is composed of five circles, one in the centre, and the four others, ranged cross-wise on its outside. Each skater stands at the furthest extremity of one of the outside circles, and when the leader gives the word, all start at once with the eight step. They thus approach each other, and as the central circle forms the top of an eight common to all, it follows that all four skaters are going round this circle at the same time. When they have gone round their circle several times, the leader calls the next change. This time, instead of simply making their eight, the skaters cut a three when they come to the centre circle, and so go round it backward. The next change brings them backward on the outside edge, done by rapidly changing the feet as the three is formed.

There are innumerable steps in this very pretty figure which is almost as variable as a cotillion, which name would be quite as applicable as that of quadrille. It is a beautiful sight to see the dancers approaching one point, all rapidly following each other round a little circle, with only a foot or two between each person ; then diverging on their separate tracks, and again meeting in the centre.

HONOR

The true basis of distinction among men, is not in position or possession ; it is not in the circumstance of life, but in the conduct. It matters not how enviable a position a man occupies, nor how much wealth he has in store, if there be defects in his behaviour he is not entitled to that respect and consideration due to one who is his superior in a moral point

I felt very bad about for a long time, for he was a real good man; and I have often thought we should have been happy if his suspenders didn't given way."

WOMAN'S POWER.

"Man is what a woman makes him," d'Roseau, himself a respecter of the c; and the records of history contain numberless examples of women who've supported their husbands or brothers in the crises of their lives. John Stuart Mill said that he owed everything that was excellent in his writings to the influence of his wife. Thos. Carlyle gives similar testimony. John axman, the sculptor, had made a considerable progress in his work when he married Annie Denman, a noble-spirited intelligent woman, full of love for art, and with an intense admiration for him as an artist. It happened that soon after the event at he met Sir Joshua Reynolds, in whose opinion no man could ever become an artist who did not devote himself entirely to art, and who had not studied patiently and reverentially the works of the great masters in Italy itself. He went to Flaxman that he was ruined as an artist. Flaxman went straight to his wife, and said to her: "Annie, I am ruined for an artist." "Who has ruined you, John?" she asked.

"It happened in church," he replied: "And Annie Denman has done it." He then told her what Sir Joshua had said, and added:—"I should like to have been a great artist."

"And so you shall be, and go to Rome, so, if that will make one," said the resolute woman. "We will work and sonomize. I will never have it said that Anne Denman ruined John Flaxman or an artist."

And so the brave couple did work and sonomize. They worked patiently and hopefully for five years, never asked help from any one, never mentioned their intentions to any one, and at last went together to Rome, where Flaxman studied and worked to such purpose that he achieved both fame and competency. His success was not shared to the full, however, by the faithful wife, for she died many years before him.

Thomas Hood gave a touching tribute to his wife's excellence:—

"I never was anything till I knew you and I have been a better, happier, and more prosperous man ever since. Whatever may befall me, the wife of my whom will have the acknowledgment of my tenderness, worth and excellence from my pen."

Many other instances might be enumerated; but we have touched upon sufficient to prove that a good wife is God's best gift to man.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE BY TWO LOVELORN GIRLS.

MONTREAL, Dec. 20.—Catherine McDonald, 18, came this morning to the police station, Chaboillez Square, and reported that she and another girl had attempted to poison themselves by taking acetate of lead. She was sick and a doctor was consequently called in, who prescribed remedies and had the girl removed to the hospital. The name of the other girl was learned to be Mary Kelly. She is said to have expectorated the poison after taking it, and was found, on being visited by the police, to be only slightly indisposed. It seems one of the girls lived in Bleury street, and the other in Roy Lane, and they went together and engaged a room at the New York Hotel, Chaboillez Square. The cause of the act on the part of the girls was disappointment in love. The parties are working girls.

Returning to his native city with his mistress, a fine-looking Russian woman of the Volga, he started the house of call for beggars, which he, up to a few weeks ago, directed and made money out of. How this money was obtained is the crowning horror of the entire affair.

Antoine Cherguille, nicknamed "The Player," is the brother of Trouilleison's mistress. Among the frequenters of the "Golden Omelette" he is called the "Opérateur." He is a man of over fifty, and for the last thirty years of his life has been engaged in the business of manufacturing cripples. From the evidence given at the trial, which is likely to send him to the guillotine, his method of procedure is as follows:—

The members of a gang of kidnapers, organized by his sister and her sightless paramour, have for the last twenty years been engaged in stealing children from the various cities of the Empire. These unfortunate little ones were brought to the headquarters at Radna, where they passed into the merciless hands of the "opérateur."

He took charge of them in a separate section of the inn, where, assisted by a couple of surgeons, whose vices had reduced them to his own level, and by his own knowledge of anatomy—for he had studied the art itself in his youth—he evolved the terribly crippled spectres who have so long pestered the pilgrims of St. Nepomuck. At the time of his arrest three children, in various stages of convalescence from mutilation, were found on the filthy cots of this demonic hospital. One of them, a pretty girl of five, had her right hand amputated. The other two, both boys, had lost their hands and feet respectively. In a pit under the floor, in one corner of the torture-chamber, were found the putrefying remnants of a dozen human members, buried in a compost of chloride of lime and quicklime. Cherguille manifested no emotion upon his arrest, but utterly refused to refuse to render any information and has been obstinately silent since.

At the time the arrest was made the business of the infamous den was in full blast. In the long common room a hundred miserable wrecks of humanity, armless, legless, handless, footless, blind and awfully disfigured, congregated about long tables. The smoke of their pipes welled the scene, the reek of their foul meal tainted the air, and the clattering of their crutches, the curses, shrieks, and loud conversation all about deafened the ordinary ear. Upon the entrance of the detectives they merely looked up, and noting the artfully disguised figures, took them for strange beggars, and continued their orgie without honoring them with any further attention. The house had been surrounded with a double cordon

One plan he has ever pursued during public life. It is never to reply to personal satire or attack. Not even a statement in print that he had poisoned his own mother would provoke the shadow of a reply. More than this, he keeps not one volume, but several in his library, filled with newspaper cuttings of an abusive character, and takes particular pleasure in pointing out to his guests the virulent attacks in which he is designated mountebank, buffoon, blasphemer, hypocrite, and villain. His dark brown eye lights up with a keen twinkle of enjoyment as he comes upon a particularly savage onslaught, and he actually smacks his lips over caricatures.

STICK TO YOUR BUSINESS.

There is nothing which should be more frequently impressed upon the minds of young men than the importance of steadily pursuing some one business. The frequent changing from one employment to another is one of the most common errors committed, and to it may be traced more than half the failures of men in business, and much of the discontent and disappointment which render life uncomfortable. It is a very common thing for a man to be dissatisfied with his business, and to desire to change it for some other, which it seems to him, will prove a more lucrative employment. But in nine cases out of ten, it is a mistake. Look round you, and you will find among your acquaintances abundant verification of our assertion. There is an honest farmer who has toiled a few years, got his farm paid for, does not grow rich very rapidly, as much for lack of contentment mingled with industry as anything, though he is not aware of it. He hears the wonderful stories of California, and how fortunes may be had for the trouble of picking them up; mortgages his farm to raise money, goes away to the land of gold, and after many months of hard toil, comes home to commence again at the bottom of the hill for a more weary and less successful climbing up again. Mark the men in every community who are notorious for ability and equally notorious for never getting ahead, and you will usually find them to be those who never stick to any one business long, but are always forsaking their occupation just when it begins to be profitable.—Scientific American.

The figure that is cut in the ice is composed of five circles, one in the centre, and the four others ranged cross-wise on its outside. Each skater stands at the furthest extremity of one of the outside circles, and when the leader gives the word, all start at once with the eight step. They thus approach each other, and as the central circle forms the top of an eight common to all, it follows that all four skaters are going round this circle at the same time. When they have gone round their circle several times, the leader calls the next change. This time, instead of simply making their right, the skaters cut a three when they come to the centre circle, and so go round it backward. The next change brings them backward on the outside edge, done by rapidly changing the feet as the three is formed.

There are innumerable steps in this very pretty figure which is almost as variable as a cotton, which name would be quite as applicable as that of quadrille. It is a beautiful sight to see the dancers approaching one point, all rapidly following each other round a little circle, with only a foot or two between each person; then diverging on their separate tracks, and again meeting in the centre.

HONOR

The true basis of distinction among men, is not in position or possession; it is not in the circumstance of life, but in the conduct. It matters not how enviable a position a man occupies, nor how much wealth he has in store, if there be defects in his behaviour he is not entitled to that respect and consideration due to one who is his superior in a moral point of view, though he possess neither riches nor honor. It is not that which gives us place, but conduct which makes the solid distinction. We should know no man above us but for his virtue; and none below us but for his vices. Entertaining this view, we would seek to imitate the good though it be found under coarse exterior and pithy the evil though it be clothed in the finest garb and dwell in luxury. We would never become obsequious in the wrong place.

Call no man mean, low or vulgar because he tills the soil or stands before the work-bench, for in point of true worth and real manhood he may be much superior to the president of a bank, some eminent liquor dealer, or Wall street broker, or the nabob who dwells in his palace. The virtuous and right-minded sons of toil and nature's noblemen; they are lords of good, lovers of each other; they were not born to shine, nor to be the recipients of empty honor; but they were born to be men, and a nation's bulwark.

A Gentleman in this city is the owner of a small Scotch terrier that shows a decided taste for music. A young lady, his daughter, is taking lessons on the piano, and many hours are given to practice. One day when the dog was in the room he showed great interest in the piano. He jumped upon the table and looked at the instrument, ran under and around it, and leaped upon it and peered into it, as if trying to find where the sound came from. One day, when the young lady was playing, the dog tried to imitate the notes. Afterwards while she was practising, the dog almost daily would try to sing. He did not bark nor howl, as dogs will often do at the sounds of bells. Although he could not pronounce fa, sol, la, mi, do, etc., he succeeded in a good imitation of the sounds, and could cause his voice to rise and fall with the notes. All this was first in the presence of the young lady. When she told her mother, and invited her presence, the dog would not sing. By and by, however, his fondness for music overcame his bashfulness, and he would sing in the presence of the two ladies. Afterward, other members of the family came in, and now the dog, having conquered his modesty and gained confidence in his own powers, will exhibit his musical talents in the presence of any company.—Troy Whig.

THE CANADIAN OIL REGION.

It is encouraging to learn that, for months past, the business in coal oil, which for years had languished has become wonderfully brisk and remunerative. In the different sections of the country the oil refineries have been in full blast, many of which had laid idle for years. The price has much advanced and the demand for foreign export, seems to have kept pace with the supply in every respect. In consequence of this long wished for and unexpected revival large numbers of men are now hard at work in the vicinity of the Petrolia oil regions digging and drilling with the hope to "strike it," in which many are being successful.

The London Free Press has, recently, been at considerable pains to ascertain the producing capacity of the Petrolia regions and reports that there are now 308 wells from which oil is being pumped, and the total daily production of oil averages 1,179 barrels. The produce of the largest well in the district is 45 barrels per day. Some of these wells have been constantly worked for the past twelve years and yet they do not show indications of failing. The larger number however, have not produced for any great length of time. Preparations are being made for drilling, and the operation has actually commenced, at about 50 other wells. It seems probably now that speculation will run high until another fall in the oil market.

OUR CHEESE EXPORTS.

It is encouraging to notice the rapid growth, from year to year, of the importance of our cheese manufacturing in Canada. Years ago our farmers made between stations, or at a station, or in the shed. No trains were left at or near Belleville, but at other points great difficulties were encountered. In addition to the drivers and firemen, all men engaged in cleaning engines at this station struck work, the whole numbering 80 men.

Mr. Davis, Mechanical Superintendent, with the aid of a few of the shopmen, succeeded in getting all the engines which had been left outside into the shop, the strikers making no effort to obstruct this work, though threats were made and a few pistol shots fired by some of them, with the object of intimidating Mr. Davis and his men. During the night preparations made by Mr. Marshall, Road Master Mr. Davis and the shop staff, to get out snow ploughs to send to the relief of trains which were stuck in the snow and to put the road in running order.

In anticipation of the strike, the Company had brought fifteen engine drivers and firemen from Toronto and other points, who were to supply as far as possible the places of the strikers. This morning one of these drivers was put on an engine to go east with the snow plough. On reaching the east end of the yard, near the second concession road crossing, a number of the strikers, who had congregated there, threw stones at the engine, some of which, thrown with great force, passed through the windows of the cab, whilst others struck the wood work, making heavy dents in its hard surface. Some of these men also jumped on the engine and the van, making threats and also pulled out the push bar, preventing the engine being coupled to the snow plough. Thus intimidated, the driver was compelled to back his engine up to the station, Mr. Davis being compelled to take the engine back to the shed. For the time being, therefore, the strikers were successful in putting a stop to business.

The shops and sheds were now closed, and the remaining portion of the staff were engaged in protecting the Company's property. This state of affairs has been reported to headquarters, and directions were being waited at the time of our visit to the station, about 11 a. m.

About 11 o'clock this morning about fifty of the strikers went to the Company's boarding house and ordered the men who were to supply their places to leave town, threatening vengeance in case of refusal. The number of these men being so small, preparations were made to take them to another place, but by Mr. Bell, the Solicitor of the Company, these preparations were checked, the men ordered to remain, and the order given to get out an engine and snow plough.

An effort was made to secure an interview between the leader of the strikers and Mr. Bell, but the former refused to see him.

LATER.

The strikers subsequently, in the absence of any policemen, proceeded to the boarding house and ordered out the strangers, whom they started on the road to Shannonville; but halted at the Lodge Room of the Brotherhood a short distance east of the station into which the men were taken, and safely guarded.

Although communicated with about 11 o'clock, it was nearly two hours later before any of the constables were despatched to the scene of the trouble. Three men left shortly before 1 o'clock, charged with making a number of arrests.

PORTLAND, Dec. 29th.—All the Engineers of the Grand Trunk Railway, from Island Pond, west, 600 in number struck to-night, leaving the engines wherever they happened. The drivers on this end have not yet struck.

TORONTO, Dec. 30th.—The storm was raging at its height as word flew along the road that the drivers had abandoned their trains. Just where the train happened to be at 9 o'clock on this section of the road, there it was stopped; in a siding at a station, in other cases midway between stations. At three o'clock this morning there was not a wheel moving on the line between Detroit and Montreal, save the mixed trains from the west, which was dodging a gang of men who were the enemies of the Company.

to the Company which they had lately served, and to the public interest. On Saturday afternoon they succeeded, either by intimidation or persuasion, in inducing the men who had been sent to keep the line open, and whom they had made prisoners in their lodge room, to become accomplices by joining the Brotherhood.

They continued to infest the neighborhood of the station, and in order to prevent the passage of a train which was expected from the east, they blocked the main line by putting the two snow ploughs which were at either end of the yard, off the metals. A requisition was at once made on the Mayor, for assistance, and the men of No. 1 company of the 49th were ordered to turn out. It was nearly midnight before 30 men could be collected, and they, in command of Capt. Harrison, were conveyed to the Station in sleighs, remaining on duty during the night. The men were busily employed during the night, in guarding the Company's property, and in protecting the men who were engaged, under the supervision of Mr. Marshall, Road Master, in replacing the snow ploughs on the track, though there being some difficulty in this matter, the strikers throwing one of the ploughs off while the volunteers and workmen were busy with the other at the other end of the yard.

On the arrival of the Montreal Express, which was expected about 10 p. m., it was anticipated that trouble would take place, but the engineer of the train, being afraid of violence, owing to the threats made at Napanee by the strikers there, would not come any further than Shannonville, where the train remained ten hours. On Sunday morning, Mr. Davis, Mechanical Superintendent, got out an engine and proceeded to Shannonville, whence he brought the train to Belleville, where it arrived at about 9 a. m. A shot was fired at the engine on her way down, but no one was hurt. Sergeant Snider, the only policeman on duty at the station, accompanied Mr. Davis on this trip, and is worthy of special mention for his courageous conduct throughout all the exciting occurrences.

There were a considerable number of passengers on the train, and many were waiting at Belleville to proceed westward. The passengers at this place disembarked, those bound west went on board, the men were delivered, those to be sent forward were received, and all was ready for a start, but that very important functionary, an engine driver was not to be had. The strikers, who were congregated on and about the platform, stated that a driver could not be had, and that if one was got they would prevent the departure of the train, in spite of the military. There was much excitement, and several hundreds of the townspeople gathered on the platform, upon which, shortly before noon, the volunteers were paraded, they being placed at its west end, in a position to guard the engine when it was brought out. At length an engineer was found in the person of Mr. Hartins, one of the men who had been brought here some days before. He declared his lack of fear, and said that he was prepared to take the train through to Toronto. An exciting hour succeeded whilst the engine was being got ready. The strikers, mingling with the large crowd of spectators, pressed forward to the west end of the platform, completely hemming in the volunteers, who stood with fixed bayonets as guardians of the locomotive at that point. At about 1 o'clock the engine was brought out of the shed and backed slowly down to the cars to be coupled. The strikers thereupon made a rush for the engine, and the military being without orders made no effort to restrain them. A number of them mounted upon the cars and upon the engine, which they succeeded in partially disabling by slipping a pin into the slide-bar, and then one of them slipping out the coupling bolt, the locomotive went ahead alone, and was taken back to the shed. Mr. S. Defries, the conductor, went to take out the pin before the engine was disabled, but was struck on the breast by a piece of iron; he was just a moment too late to effect his purpose. Several stones were also thrown, and some severe wounds were very active in doing what they can to mitigate the evil effects of the ill-advised action of the strikers, but in spite of this the men will find a heavy amount of ill chargeable against them, which in due time they will be called upon to liquidate.

TORONTO Jan. 2.—The excitement incident to the Grand Trunk strike shows no symptoms of abatement. Neither party manifest any disposition to make concession. The strikers yesterday sent a deputation to the Post Office authorities saying that they would furnish a driver (provided the Superintendent wished it) to take a train carrying the mails eastward or westward and offered assurance that the train would be in no way molested by the drivers or their friends along the line. The proposal was not entertained, however by the Grand Trunk authorities and to-day a train will leave at nine o'clock in the morning for the east carrying 200 men of the Queen's Own under the command of Col. Otter, Mayor Jarvis Dr. Thorburn, Capt. Buchanan, five captains and eight subalterns. Some doubt is expressed, however, as to whether the men will be more inclined to oppose the rioters than the Belleville volunteers were. This is a mere conjecture and will probably be without foundation. The trains will proceed to Belleville and thence eastward as far as Landeaster, probably.

Yesterday about noon a shunting engine left the Union Station in charge of a Montreal driver and fireman to do some work at the Don station, but as soon as it reached its destination five or six strangers rushed out and took forcible possession of the engine, driving off the driver and fireman. They then put the engine on the main line and started it eastward where it ran into the side switch, which had been left open. Here the engine ran off the track and was badly damaged. A posse of city police were soon upon the ground but the men who committed the outrage were nowhere to be found, and as yet no arrests have been made, through the detectives in the employment of the company are making every effort to find the offenders.

Yesterday morning a special train left Cobourg bringing the delayed mails and passengers. It got along safely as far as Port Hope, but just as it was ready to leave that station Conductor Kavanagh caught James Kennedy, one of the striking firemen in the act of dropping a bolt into a slide bar of a locomotive. Kenney was immediately handed over to the authorities and lodged in gaol. The train then proceeded to Toronto without further interruption arriving at the Don just after the perpetration of the outrage already described.

OUR CHEESE EXPORTS.

It is encouraging to notice the rapid growth, from year to year, of the importance of our cheese manufacturing in Canada. Years ago our farmers made little or no account whatever of the manufacture of cheese, depending almost entirely on their grain for the sale and profits, and in consequence the complaint was frequent that the old farms were about "run out," and so they were by their constant croppings of one or two kinds of grain. In some sections of this country too much seems to be done yet by many farmers in the growth of barley alone, to the neglect of other branches of business quite as advantageous in the long run.

During the days of the reciprocity treaty with the United States, when our live stock entered the American markets duty free, a great portion of the cows reared in the Province were sold to drovers and driven to the Yankee dairy farms, while we were content to import cheese from these same farmers. According to the official trade returns we imported from the United States, during the last year of the reciprocity treaty, over half a million dollars worth of cheese, and we had no export trade. The abrogation of that treaty stopped, to a large extent, our export of cattle, and the manufacture of cheese at home became a necessity. The result has been that an important agricultural industry is being rapidly developed, and the farms of our dairymen are becoming much better cultivated and more productive in consequence.

The figures from the Government Trade Returns will give some idea of the extent and rapid growth of our cheese exports during the past five years. We exported in

At three o'clock this morning there was not a wheel moving on the line between Detroit and Montreal, save the mixed trains from the west, which was dodging a gang of men believed to be overzealous friends of some of the strikers, at the Queen street crossing. At ten o'clock about fifty men, chiefly firemen strikers and their outside champions, entered the Round House and extinguished the lamps. It was thought that they meant to attack the building and the locomotives within it, and a guard of police was summoned. The intruders dispersed, but hovered in the neighborhood of the Round House all night, and the police remained on duty. In one or two instances, the hose-bags, the rubber tubes which convey the water from the tank in the tender to the boiler, were wantonly cut, and the locomotive of course temporarily disabled. In many cases, however, the locomotives have suffered great damage from having been carelessly abandoned, the blow cocks being left open, the steam and water blown out and the fire left in, &c.

In at least one case, that of McKibbin, driver of the mixed which left the Union at 3 p. m., going west, violence was used against those who refused to strike. McKibbin was seized at Stratford and compelled to leave his engine; in fact, it is said he was thrown out of the cab window.

Four "dead" engines with twelve cars now cumber the road between the Don and Scarborough station.

The Montreal express due here last night at seven minutes past eleven, was left to its fate three and a half miles east of Cobourg. There were sixty-five passengers on the train, but at three o'clock this morning sleighs were despatched from Cobourg to bring them in.

Several stones were also thrown, and some severe wounds were inflicted in this manner. The engineer was chased by the crowd and fired a shot from his revolver. This infuriated the rioters, who threatened vengeance. The tumult for some minutes was of the most violent description, though still no orders were given to the military. Meanwhile the engineer returned and claimed protection, but seeing that he could not be protected he ran into the station house, one of the strikers firing two shots at him as he ran but fortunately without hitting any one, though a boy had a narrow escape. The volunteers were then marched off the platform, and experienced considerable difficulty in doing so. One of the strikers made an attempt to seize their bayonets, but they were in most instances good naturedly pushed aside, though one of the men lost his temper and slightly wounded a striker with a thrust of the bayonet in the throat. Hartins the engineer was pursued into the station house by a number of the rioters and their severely beaten, despite the gallant efforts of Col. Brown to protect him; he was taken down town in a sleigh and received medical attention. Although much elated with their victory, the strikers did not do any more damage during the afternoon.

They offered, we understand, to allow the mail car to proceed, through insisting that the passenger car should remain, but this offer was not accepted. One hundred men of the 105th Battalion were ordered out in the morning, but it was 2 o'clock before twenty could be collected, some of the men sympathizing with the strikers. They then put the engine on the main line and started it eastward where it ran into the slide switch, which had been left open. At half-past eight last night about 200 members and friends of L. O. L. 588 left the Union Station to attend the annual ball of the Lodge at the Eagle Hotel Weston. They had hired a special train. About two miles west of the Asylum, and in the neighborhood of some tremendous drifts, the driver struck blow off steam, raked out the fire and walked away, bidding the train and its occupants good-bye. The latter made the best of their way back to the city, the ladies in their ball dresses suffering severely.

Mr. Gregory, the Assistant-Superintendent, and all the heads of the Department here were on duty all night. All trains are stopped and cancelled. The "dead" trains will probably be removed from the line to-day and the road cleared, but it is impossible to say at present when travel will be re-commenced.

BROOKVILLE, Dec. 30.—All quiet here among the strikers. No intimidation of any account.

MONTREAL, Dec. 30.—A number of the engineers on the Grand Trunk Railway struck work last night. It is understood that they presented a demand at seven o'clock p.m. A severe snow storm was raging over the whole country, so that the Company had to cancel trains before the threatened period of the strike.

It is said that some acts of violence have been committed, for the punishment of which the civil authorities are taking steps.

It is stated that the company have numbers of reserve men, who are being intimidated at out-lying stations, and that a reign of terror has been established under the dictation of the committee of the Brotherhood of locomotive engineers. It is not expected, however, to last, and it is certain that in Lower Canada sharp and short work will be made of the men who have left their employment without propriety or who have committed any depredations whatever, the French law on this subject being very strict.

There has been no damage so far to the Company's property.

BELLEVILLE, Jan 1st. Events in connection with the strike of the Grand Trunk employees, have proved to be even more exciting than anticipated, the men having exhibited a determination to secure their ends, regardless of consequence to the Company which they had lately served, and to the public interest. On Saturday afternoon they succeeded, either by intimidation or persuasion, in inducing the men who had been sent to keep the line open, and whom they had made prisoners in their lodge room, to become accomplices by joining the Brotherhood.

They continued to infest the neighborhood of the station, and in order to prevent the passage of a train which was expected from the east, they blocked the main line by putting the two snow ploughs which were at either end of the yard, off the metals. A requisition was at once made on the Mayor, for assistance, and the men of No. 1 company of the 49th were ordered to turn out. It was nearly midnight before 30 men could be collected, and they, in command of Capt. Harrison, were conveyed to the Station in sleighs, remaining on duty during the night. The men were busily employed during the night, in guarding the Company's property, and in protecting the men who were engaged, under the supervision of Mr. Marshall, Road Master, in replacing the snow ploughs on the track, though there being some difficulty in this matter, the strikers throwing one of the ploughs off while the volunteers and workmen were busy with the other at the other end of the yard.

On the arrival of the Montreal Express with the strikers and others refusing to turn out on account of the bad treatment they had received from the Government. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon they proceeded, commanded by Capt. Crozier, to the station, there to remain on duty during the night, guarding the property of the Company. Other Officers of the 15th were present, among them Lt. Col. Lazier and Major Abbott.

It had been determined to make another attempt at 5 o'clock to start the train, but this idea was abandoned, it being resolved to wait until morning, when a larger force of the military could be gathered and more effective measures taken to ensure the success of the attempt.

A rumor which caused fear of further trouble, was that the Kingston strikers were coming hither to assist them.

Belleville seems to be the only place where the strikers are in the ascendant, as No. 1 express, which left Toronto, at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning, reached Cobourg at 8 p.m., no resistance to its passage having been made. The train was left at Cobourg, pending word from place.

Sunday night passed quickly, those on duty not being disturbed, towards morning a pistol shot was fired by one of the Grand Trunk employees at Mr. Clark by some person unknown but who was not one of the strikers. Mr. Clarke pursued but could not overtake him.

Among the sad cases caused by the above strike was that of one poor woman on her way to Detroit to see her dying husband, and who was thus compelled to endure an agonizing suspense known to none but herself. Several travelling families were without food and had to be fed by the Company. An old man an invalid, thought suffering from illness and without money, was obliged to remain here, bereft of the sympathy of his friends, though otherwise comfortably provided by the Company. Some two other families, whose means had been exhausted, were also thrown as a burden upon the Company, and almost all sorts of personal inconvenience and distress resulted to the unfortunate passengers by the outrageous actions of the strikers, who are those directly responsible for all the evil consequences which may ensue.

The detention of the mails is also a matter of a very serious charge, there being no less than one hundred and fifty money packages in charge of Mr. A. Menzies, mail conductor on the Montreal express. What the loss and inconvenience of the owners of this money may be can be conjectured.

The officials of the Company here are very active in doing what they can to mitigate the evil effects of the ill-advised action of the strikers, but in spite of this the men will find a heavy amount of ill chargeable against them, which in due time they will be called upon to liquidate.

TORONTO Jan. 2.—The excitement incident to the Grand Trunk strike shows no symptoms of abatement. Neither party manifest any disposition to make concession. The strikers yesterday sent a deputation to the Post Office authorities saying that they would furnish a driver (provided the Superintendent wished it) to take a train carrying the mails eastward or westward and offered assurance that the train would be in no way molested by the drivers or their friends along the line. The proposal was not entertained, however by the Grand Trunk authorities and to-day a train will leave at nine o'clock in the morning for the east carrying 200 men of the Queen's Own under the command of Col. Otter, Mayor Jarvis Dr. Thorburn, Capt. Buchan, five captains and eight subalterns. Some doubt is expressed, however, as to whether the men will be more inclined to oppose the rioters than the Belleville volunteers were. This is a mere conjecture and will probably be without foundation. The trains will proceed to Belleville and thence eastward as far as Lancaster, probably.

On the arrival of the Montreal Express, which was expected about 10 p. m., it was anticipated that trouble would take place, but the engineer of the train, being afraid of violence, owing to the threats made at Napanee by the strikers there, would not come any further than Shannonville, where the train remained ten hours. On Sunday morning, Mr. Davis, Mechanical Superintendent, got out an engine and proceeded to Shannonville, whence he brought the train to Belleville, where it arrived at about 9 a. m. A shot was fired at the engine on her way down, but no one was hurt. Sergeant Snider, the only policeman on duty at the station, accompanied Mr. Davis on this trip, and is worthy of special mention for his courageous conduct throughout all the exciting occurrences.

There were a considerable number of passengers on the train, and many were waiting at Belleville to proceed westward. The passengers for this place disembarked,—those bound west went on board, the mails were delivered, those to be sent forward were received, and all was ready for a start, but that very important functionary, an engine-driver was not to be had. The strikers, who were congregated on and about the platform, stated that a driver could not be had, and that if one was got they would prevent the departure of the train, in spite of the military. There was much excitement, and several hundreds of the townspeople gathered on the platform, upon which, shortly before noon, the volunteers were paraded, they being placed at its west end, in a position to guard the engine when it was brought out. At length an engineer was found in the person of Mr. Hartins, one of the men who had been brought here some days before. He declared his lack of fear, and said that he was prepared to take the train through to Toronto. An exciting hour succeeded whilst the engine was being got ready. The strikers, mingling with the large crowd of spectators, pressed forward to the west end of the platform, completely hemming in the volunteers, who stood with fixed bayonets as guardberet of the sympathy of his friends, though otherwise comfortably provided by the Company. Yesterday about noon a shunting engine left the Union Station in charge of a Montreal driver and fireman to do some work at the Don station, but as soon as it reached its destination five or six strangers rushed out and took forcible possession of the engine, driving off the driver and fireman. They then put the engine on the main line and started it eastward where it ran into the side switch, which had been left open. Here the engine ran off the track and was badly damaged. A posse of city police were soon upon the ground but the men who committed the outrage were nowhere to be found, and as yet no arrests have been made, through the detectives in the employment of the company are making every effort to find the offenders.

Yesterday morning a special train left Cobourg bringing the delayed mails and passengers. It got along safely as far as Port Hope, but just as it was ready to leave that station Conductor Kavanagh caught James Kennedy, one of the striking fireman in the act of dropping a bolt into a slide bar of a locomotive. Kenney was immediately handed over to the authorities and lodged in gaol. The train then proceeded to Toronto without further interruption arriving at the Don just after the perpetration of the outrage already described.

The strikers, mingling with the large crowd of spectators, pressed forward to the west end of the platform, completely hemming in the volunteers, who stood with fixed bayonets as guardians of the locomotive at that point. At about 1 o'clock the engine was brought out of the shed and backed slowly down to the cars to be coupled. The strikers thereupon made a rush for the engine, and the military being without orders made no effort to restrain them. A number of them mounted upon the cars and upon the engine, which they succeeded in partially disabling by slipping a pin into the slide-bar, and then one of them slipping out the coupling bolt, the locomotive went ahead alone, and was taken back to the shed. Mr. S. Defries, the conductor, went to take out the pin before the engine was disabled, but was struck on the breast by a piece of iron; he was just a moment too late to effect his purpose. Several stones were also thrown, and some severe wounds were inflicted in this manner. The engineer was chased by the crowd and fired a shot from his revolver. This infuriated the rioters, who threatened vengeance. The tumult for some minutes was of the most violent description, though still no orders were given to the military. Meanwhile the engineer returned and claimed protection, but seeing that he could not be protected he ran into the station house, one of the strikers firing two shots at him as he ran but fortunately without hitting any one, though a boy had a narrow escape. The volunteers were then watched off the platform, and experienced considerable difficulty in doing so. One of the strikers made an attempt to seize their bayonets, but they were in most instances good naturedly pushed aside, though one of the men lost his temper and slightly wounded a striker with a thrust of the bayonet in the throat. Hartins the engineer was pursued into the station house by a number of the rioters and their severely beaten, despite the gallant efforts of Col. Brown to protect him; he was taken down town in a sleigh and received medical attention. Although much elated with their victory, the strikers did not do any more damage during the afternoon.

They offered, we understand, to allow the mail car to proceed, through insisting that the passenger car should remain, but this offer was not accepted.

One hundred men of the 16th Battalion were ordered out in the morning, but it was 2 o'clock before they could be collected, some of the men sympathizing session of the engine, driving off the driver and fireman. They then put the engine on the main line and started it eastward where it ran into the side switch, which had been left open. THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, JAN. 5th, 1876.

Skating Carnival.

Remember the Carnival next Thursday evening on Jasper's Rink. Come one and all, and have some fun.

Inland Revenue.

Excise duties collected at Napanee for December 1876, were $1,240.21, making the total collected for December quarter 1876, $4,098.84 cents.

Customs.

Customs duties collected at the port of Napanee for December 1876 $416.52, and the duties collected for the quarter ended 31st Dec. 1876 were $1,864.93.

Narrow Escape.

On Sunday evening a slight fire occurred in Molloy's Dry Good Store, which was discovered in time to be extinguished before any damage was sustained.

Readings for the Poor.

On Tuesday night this popular resort was favored with a full house. Receipts at the door $26. Another next Tuesday evening the 9th.

Financial.

Do you see that anxious looking man with the chin whisker? That's our friend Mac, the tax collector, on the war path. Look out for him.

Exciting Times.

The great snow storm—Railway Strike—Call to Arms—New Years day—And our Municipal Elections—All within three days, have made things pretty lively in this unusually dull season.

Gates Ajar.

A very small amount of mechanical ingenuity will enable any man to repair a gate with a broken hinge or latch, which persists in swinging across the pavement to the great annoyance of pedestrians.

A Necessity

All firemen know the difficulty of holding and guiding the metallic branch pipes, especially during the cold weather, we understand Mr. Carson has added two handles and covered them with leather in a very efficient manner.

No Bells.

We call the attention of the Chief of Police to the numerous violations of the law, imposing a fine upon all who drive without bells in winter. At times it is impossible to hear a coming sleigh, and fast driving makes it worse, especially for women and children.

Dedicatory Services.

The dedicatory services of the Gretna C. M. Church, resulted in a very satisfactory financial result. The amount realized at the Tea Meeting was $730, which with the former amount raised $1,851, gives a total of $2,581, enough to finish up the church, shed and fence, in a good substantial manner.

First Mail.

The first mail from the west since Friday afternoon of last week, arrived by stage on Tuesday morning and reined up in front of Post Office in a style that reminds us of the old days of Stage Coaching, when railway strikes were unknown, and the man who acted as conductor handled his "four in hand" in a manner that was the envy and ambition of our boyish days.

An Old Time Snow Storm.

Vennor has hit the mark. It commenced snowing on Friday afternoon the 29th ult., and continued increasing in force until evening, when it was almost blinding in its effects, blowing and drifting in every direction all through the night. Saturday morning the roads were almost impassable, the snow being about eighteen inches on a level, but the high drifts were in places at least eight feet

Adolphustown.

All the old council were elected by acclamation. This is the second time for Mr. Davis as Reeve by acclamation. The acts of the Council for the last year were considered by the electors very creditable.

School Trustees.

This election takes place Wednesday next. Messrs C. B. Perry, A. O. Davis and J. F. McCay. East, Centre and West Wards are the retiring trustees. The education of our youth is so very important that men well qualified for the office should be chosen.

Fire.

Our Christmas festivities wound up with a serious fire, commencing in Wilkinson's grocery and feed store, corner Dundas and Robert streets. The family being absent, gave the fire a chance to make such headway, that nothing was saved. An adjoining grocery, and two or three dwellings had their contents badly damaged by their hurried removal. The firemen as usual, worked with a will, the hose bursting several times, caused considerable delay.

Obituary.

The Kingston Whig of last week reports the death of Charles Penner, Esq., of Kingston, aged 88 years. Mr. Penner was well known and highly respected by many readers of the Express. He was a gentleman of wealth and liberality and much kindness of heart. For years Mr. Penner owned a farm in Adolphustown, where he spent his summers, and took great satisfaction in introducing improved implements and systems of husbandry, as well as superior breeds of farm stock. There is no doubt but the system of farming in Adolphustown, and in the County was much improved by the influence he exerted. He was a fine type of the real "English Gentleman" and will long be remembered with pleasure by those who knew him.

Obituary.

It is our painful duty to record the death of Samuel M. Benson, Esq., of Belleville. The oldest Provincial Land Surveyor in Canada at the time of his decease. Aged 75 years and 9 months. He commenced surveying at the age of 17 years, when residing in little York—now Toronto, and was employed on the Survey of Young Street and a large number of townships North of Toronto. He removed to Belleville with his father's family about 50 years ago and was employed by the Government to survey Hungerford, Sheffield, Hinchinbrook, Bedford, part of Tyendinaga, and a large number of other townships in this part of Canada. He made the first survey of the town of Napanee, for the late John Solomon Cartwright, about the year 1832, and was connected with the early settlement, and improvement of this place. He took an active part in the troubles at Prescott during the rebellion of '37 & '38, as a captain of volunteers. Although somewhat reserved in manners, he was possessed of sterling integrity and honesty of purpose. For about 20 years of his latter days, he was a staunch and faithful member of the G. M. Church. The remains were interred on the 29th, and were followed, to the Cemetery by a large number of friends and acquaintance, by whom he was highly esteemed and respected.

MORVEN.

Mr. Express.

DEAR EDITOR.—According to announcement by bills, I went to see one of F. B. Stratton's Mammoth Juvenile Entertainments. The first of these came off here Thursday, Dec. 21st. It was all that we expected and more. The singers under the able management of Miss Frank Stratton, beat everything we have ever seen. About fifty were nicely arranged on a platform, and did themselves very great credit. The Temperance Songs were practical, and designed to teach many useful lessons. Miss Stratton is not only well accomplished, as a musician, but certainly excels as a trainer of the youth, as evinced in the whole of the singing, etc. Some over pious ones I hear, think the Rev. Gentleman, has committed an unpardonable sin in having these performances in the church, but our earnest hope is that he may long live, to interest the public on similar occasions, and attest the deep anxiety he feels for the welfare of the youth. The speaking was appropriate. The chair was filled by Rev. J. Might, and the whole, the best we have yet witnessed. A large number were in attendance, and showed their appreciation in bursts of applause.

The second one held at the Bethany Church, outdid the former. I shall not attempt a description, nor make any invidious distinctions. The solos, were delightful. Choruses splendid, and all was grand. The church was jammed to its utmost capacity. The chair was filled by Milo Parks, Esq.

Happy is the church that is blessed with such a man as the Rev. Mr. Stratton, to train and care for the rising generation. FIDUS.

MILL POINT.

(From our own Correspondence.)

Cedar Mill commenced work on the 2nd. The Skating Rink flourishing, attendance large.

The Shooting Match on the 25th., was a good thing but, the crack shots did not make as good hits, as the green ones.

A Social Ball was held in Rathbun's Hall, on New Years night, which was well attended and everybody enjoyed themselves.

FEARFUL ACCIDENT IN ON

A TRAIN FALLS FROM A BRIDGE INTO RIVER—GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 29.—A terrible accident has occurred at Ashtabula, Train No. 4, Henry, conducted on Lake Shore, bound west, went thru an iron bridge, down seventy-five feet to the river. It is reported that six coaches, and all the baggage and express cars, were burned, and about one hundred persons killed.

LATER.—The scene of the accident Ashtabula is a few rods east of the D. The Doon bridge spans the Ashtabula creek, seventy-five feet above the water. On both sides are high banks. It has been falling almost constantly for last forty-eight hours, and now a drift storm is raging, making it very difficult to get news from the wrecked and burning train. The citizens of Ashtabula with a competent corps of physicians, doing everything possible for the survivors.

LATER STILL.—Cleveland, 10.30.—Burnham, of Milwaukee, is slightly burned. The Mrs. Leu mentioned from Rochester, N. Y., it is now thought is from Delaware.

10.25 p. m.—The storm at Ashtabula somewhat abated. The weather is growing colder. It seems that the train and bridge smashed the ice in creek, and those not killed by the fall burned by the burning cars were down by the wreck and drowned by they could be extricated. Many, will be or have been frozen. A large number of citizens of Ashtabula at the wreck, and as many as can are working to rescue those not already drowned. Hundreds stand ready to relieve those who become exhausted with toil. Work goes on very slowly. It is impossible at present to learn the names of single one killed except the body of Bradley. It is known that there is a large number of Eastern people on train. It is said that seven coaches were all well filled. The express messengers for the American Express Company, missing.

11 p. m.—A special train with physicians nurses, and everything for the comfort of the wounded, left the Union depot at 10 p. m. The weather is still growing colder at Ashtabula, and only four bodies so far have been taken from the belated Mary Frame, of Rochester, N. Y., fatally injured. It is estimated that there were 175 passengers on the train. At least one-third of these were killed, but not seriously injured. The train was drawn by two engines. One engine remained on the bridge. Everything went down. The engineer and fireman on the engine that went down were but not seriously injured. The work removing the dead bodies still goes very slowly.

THE LATEST.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 29, 12.45 a. m.—near as can be ascertained, fifty-two persons were wounded. How many escaped unhurt it is reported that the fire is burning, but going down. The fast press car was smashed to splinters, is now burning. The train is known the Pacific express. There were coaches and one or two drawing-cars.

Walter S. Hayes, Lexington, Ky., H. Clark, Westfield, Mass., and Lyons, New York, are slightly hurt. Henry Champlin, of Cleveland, is hurt.

1.20 a. m.—The wreck has now been ed down but it will be daylight before much can be done towards getting the dead. The special train with stretchers, blankets, &c., which left at 10.30 was drawn by two engines, the engines, owing to the deep snow on the track was two hours getting Painesville, thirty miles from here half way between Cleveland and Ashtabula.

ANOTHER DISASTER.

RUTLAND, Vt. Dec. 29.—The Mont

and guiding the metallic branch pipes, especially during the cold weather, we understand Mr. Carson has added two handles and covered them with leather in a very efficient manner.

No Bells.

We call the attention of the Chief of Police to the numerous violations of the law, imposing a fine upon all who drive without bells in winter. At times it is impossible to hear a coming sleigh, and fast driving makes it worse, especially for women and children.

Dedicatory Services.

The dedicatory services of the Gretna C. M. Church, resulted in a very satisfactory financial result. The amount realized at the Tea Meeting was $730, which with the former amount raised $1,851, gives a total of $2,581, enough to finish up the church, shed and fence, in a good substantial manner.

First Mail.

The first mail from the west since Friday afternoon of last week, arrived by stage on Tuesday morning and reined up in front of Post Office in a style that reminds us of the old days of Stage Coaching, when railway strikes were unknown, and the man who acted as conductor handled "his four in hand" in a manner that was the envy and ambition of our boyish days.

An Old Time Snow Storm.

Venor has hit the mark. It commenced snowing on Friday afternoon the 29th ult., and continued increasing in force until evening, when it was almost blinding in its effects, blowing and drifting in every direction all through the night. Saturday morning the roads were almost impassable, the snow being about eighteen inches on a level, but the high drifts were in places at least eight feet deep.

Our Candidates.

What a change in some people. For the past month as our Mayor went his rounds chatting pleasantly with every one, both great and small, his round boyish face wore a smile reminding one of a full moon;—and the Doctor, the sedate, solemn, and taciturn, Doctor, actually bowed like a Chesterfield to every passer-by. The former still retains his old smile, and the latter,—we have not met, but suppose he bows as polite as ever.

Strike at an End.

The imbecile manager of the Grand Trunk has at last come to terms asked for by the strikers. He it is, who must rightfully shoulder the ill effects of this strike. Had he been possessed of a little honesty and manliness towards those under his directions, this would not have occurred. However, he is a specimen of that kind of bull-headed toadying Englishman, the company has inflicted upon us since the road was first run, as its manager. He is assisted by men similar to himself, and until some live Canadian or an American is put in charge of the Grand Trunk, its miserable management will continue to be a byword and discredit to Canada.

It is our painful duty to record the death of Samuel M. Benson, Esq., of Belleville. The oldest Provincial Land Surveyor in Canada at the time of his decease. Aged 75 years and 9 months. He commenced surveying at the age of 17 years, when residing in little York—now Toronto, and was employed on the Survey of Young Street and a large number of townships North of Toronto. He removed to Belleville with his father's family about 50 years ago and was employed by the Government to survey Hungerford, Sheffield, Hinchinbrook, Bedford, part of Tyendinaga, and a large number of other townships in this part of Canada. He made the first survey of the town of Napanee, for the late John Solomon Cartwright, about the year 1832, and was connected with the early settlement, and improvement of this place. He took an active part in the troubles at Prescott during the rebellion of '37 & '38, as a captain of volunteers. Although somewhat reserved in manners, he was possessed of sterling integrity and honesty of purpose. For about 20 years of his latter days, he was a staunch and faithful member of the C. M. Church. The remains were interred on the 29th, and were followed, to the Cemetery by a large number of friends and acquaintance, by whom he was highly esteemed and respected.

"VOLUNTEERS TO THE FRONT."

A FALSE ALARM.

On Sunday afternoon about three o'clock, when our quiet citizens were taking their usual afternoon's nap, or were comfortably seated around their hearthstones, the fire bell rang a merry peal,—everybody ran to the market square—but no fire—no engine—each man questioned his neighbor, no wiser than himself.

Mayor Williams and Capt. Hooper, asked the attention of the still increasing crowd, when they read: "A telegram from Toronto, calling upon the volunteers to hold themselves in readiness, to proceed to Belleville and protect the Grand Trunk against the rioting railway employees, in case of any serious disturbance."

A few pertinent remarks from different speakers, and sundry hearty cheers from the spectators, elicited the fact that our patriotism (if sending our boys to fight against hard working men for resisting the demands of an unjust corporation may be called such) is at a very low ebb.

Our Worthy Mayor at last called for a show of hands? Only three unfortunate responded who were laughed down by the assembled crowd.

One or two communists now seized the opportunity of discussing the merits of Blue Blood, Aristocracy, etc., much to the amusement of their listeners. Finally the immense throng quietly separated, and whilst deprecating the acts of the men, in meddling with Railway property, the feeling generally, was decidedly in favor of the employees.

CLARK'S MILLS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Signs of Christmas have in many various ways shown themselves in this neighborhood.

The pulpit of the C. M. Church was occupied last Sunday by the Rev. Samuel Might of Morven, who preached to a good congregation.

He Mr. Jack, has also provided ample amusement to the boys and girls on the river having hardened its surface, and made it that we can now go over dry shod.

Santa Clause, the particular friend of the juvenile population has been busy making his calls and leaving sundry stocking full of good things.

Sundry dead geese and turkeys have also found a home and resting place, just at a very seasonable time, amongst those who have not the privilege of owning a farm.

We have had a distinguished visitor whose annual visit is mostly felt at this season of the year in person of "Jack Frost" he paid a visit to the Grist Mill and stopped the machinery and sent the miller to enjoying himself in the bosom of his family, and to all appearance he intends giving him a protracted holiday.

A few days ago a painful accident happened about a mile and a half north of this village. A family by the name of Hinch, was visited by the unwelcome visitor, death, which took the old lady off, leaving the old man, the son and his wife. While the son was away making arrangements for the funeral, some ignitable material caught fire from the candles that had been used at the "wake" the house and all its contents, including about $15 in bank bills, and $300 in notes were consumed, the worst feature of the sad affair is, the corpse was subjected to involuntary cremation, for it was completely burnt.

No use of any longer taking the large repulsive, griping drastic and nauseous pills composed of crude and bulky ingredients, and put up in cheap wood or paste board boxes, when we can, by a careful application of chemical science extract the cathartic and other medicinal properties from the most valuable roots and herbs and concentrate them into a minute Granule scarcely larger than a mustard seed, that can be readily swallowed by those of the most sensitive stomachs and fastidious tastes. Each of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets represents, in a most concentrated form, as much cathartic power in proportion to their size, people who have not tried them are apt to suppose that they are harsh or drastic in effect, but such is not the case the different active medicinal principles which they are composed being so harmonized one by the others, as to produce a most searching and thorough yet gentle and kindly operating cathartic. Our New Council.

The Mayor, Mr. Williams, is too well and favorably known to require remark, his majority of 209 over his opponent Dr. Rutan, (a popular man,) speaks for itself. The Reeve, Mr. John Herring, is a man of good abilities, square and straight, and has the welfare of the Town at heart. The Deputy Reeve, Mr. C. R. Miller, has been in the Council for some years and should make a good Councillor. Messrs W. Joy, H. L. Geddes and Chas. Jones, are old councillors of long experience, especially Mr. Jones, whose knowledge and business qualities should make him an extra good man for the position. Mr. Joy will make a bouncing councillor, and from our personal knowledge of him, believe he will be a good one. Mr. Cliff and Mr. Fralick are new men at the business, we hope they will be such as the town requires and build up for themselves a creditable reputation as councillors. Mr. McNeil is an old hand and will take an active interest in whatever is for the best interests of the town. Mr. Carscallen is new, but if he takes the same interest in the town's business that he has in his own, he will be a credit to his ward. Mr. Lane should also show a good record at the end of the year. Altogether, the batch looks capable of handling the town's affairs in a proper manner. They will have something to do this year. We hope they will tackle it manfully, drop all wire pulling, attend to their business as councillors, and come through with honors. Time will tell.

BATH.

How often have we heard the remark, "What a dead place Bath is." Well, the old place is possessed of some life yet. The gathering at the Town Hall on Christmas night, is proof of that. As early as 6:30 o'clock, the hall was full. At 7 o'clock, it overflowed. The occasion of the crowd, was an entertainment for the benefit of the Sunday School for the C. M. Church. Said entertainment consisted of dialogues, recitations, readings, songs, etc., closed by the unveiling of a Christmas Tree, and the distribution of gifts to the Sunday School scholars, teachers, and others. A pleasing feature of the entertainment, was the presentation of a number of valuable books, to Mr. Sebastian Miller, a worthy local preacher, likewise the presentation of a whip, etc., a purse of money ($40.00) to buy a fur coat, to the pastor of the church here, E. S. Shory. Were those gifts to Mr. Shory, expressive of anything more than the good will of the people? Were they a hint to use the whip more, in and out the pulpit, and to clothe his sermons better? Who will tell? The entertainment was a decided success.

Mr. EXPRESS.
DEAR EDITOR.—According to announcement by bills, I went to see one of F. B. Stratton's Mammoth Juvenile Entertainments. The first of these came off here Thursday, Dec. 21st. It was all that we expected and more. The singers under the able management of Miss Frank Stratton, beat everything we have ever seen. About fifty were nicely arranged on a platform, and did themselves very great credit. The Temperance Songs were practical, and designed to teach many useful lessons. Miss Stratton is not only well accomplished as a musician, but certainly excels as a trainer of the youth, as evinced in the whole of the singing, etc. Some over pious ones I hear, think the Rev. Gentleman, has committed an unpardonable sin in having these performances in the church, but our earnest hope is that he may long live, to interest the public on similar occasions, and attest the deep anxiety he feels for the welfare of the youth. The speaking was appropriate. The chair was filled by Rev. J. Might, and the whole, the best we have yet witnessed. A large number were in attendance, and showed their appreciation in bursts of applause.

The second one held at the Bethany Church, outdid the former. I shall not attempt a description, nor make any vivid distinctions. The solos, were delightful. Choruses splendid, and all was grand. The church was jammed to its utmost capacity. The chair was filled by Milo Parks, Esq.
Happy is the church that is blessed with such a man as the Rev. Mr. Stratton, to train and care for the rising generation.

FEARFUL ACCIDENT IN OHIO.

A TRAIN FALLS FROM A BRIDGE INTO A RIVER—GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 29.—A terrible accident has occurred at Ashtabula, O. Train No. 4, Henry, conducted on the Lake Shore, bound west, went through an iron bridge, down seventy-five feet to the river. It is reported that seven coaches, and all the baggage and express cars, were burned, and about one out of every five persons killed.

LATER.—The scene of the accident at Ashtabula is a few rods east of the depot. The Doon bridge spans the Ashtabula creek, seventy-five feet above the water. On both sides are high banks. Snow has been falling almost constantly for the last forty-eight hours, and now a driving storm is raging, making it very difficult to get news from the wrecked and burning train. The citizens of Ashtabula, with a competent corps of physicians, are doing everything possible for the sufferers.

LATER STILL.—Cleveland, 10.30 p.m.—Burnham, of Milwaukee, is slightly burned. The Mrs. Lee mentioned as from Rochester, N. Y., it is now thought is from Delaware.

10.35 p.m.—the storm at Ashtabula has somewhat abated. The weather is fast growing colder. It seems that the falling train and bridge smashed the ice in the creek, and those not killed by the fall or burned by the burning cars were held down by the wreck and drowned before they could be extricated. Many, too, will be or have been frozen. A large number of citizens of Ashtabula are at the wreck, and as many as can are working to rescue those not already dead. Hundreds stand ready to relieve those who become exhausted with toil. The work goes on very slowly. It is impossible at present to learn the names of a single one killed except the body of Mrs. Bradley. It is known that there were a large number of Eastern people on the train. It is said that seven coaches were all well filled. The express messenger for the American Express Company is missing.

11 p.m.—A special train with physicians nurses, and everything for the comfort of the wounded, left the Union depot at 10 p.m. The weather is still growing colder at Ashtabula, and only four bodies so far have been taken from the bebris. Mary Frame, of Rochester, N. Y., is fatally injured. It is estimated that there were 175 passengers on the train. At least one-third of these were killed, burned to death or frozen. The train was drawn by two engines. One engine remained on the bridge. Everything else went down. The engineer and fireman on the engine that went down were badly but not seriously injured. The work of removing the dead bodies still goes on very slowly.

THE LATEST.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 29, 12 45 a. m.—As near as can be ascertained, fifty-two persons were wounded. How many escaped unhurt it is reported that the fire is still burning, but going down. The fast express car was smashed to splinters, and is now burning. The train is known as the Pacific express. There were six coaches and one or two drawing-room cars.

Walter S. Hayes, Lexington, Ky., D. H. Clark, Westfield, Mass., and Mr. Lyons, New York, are slightly hurt; Henry Champlin, of Cleveland, is badly hurt.

1.20 a. m.—The wreck has now burned down but it will be daylight before much can be done towards getting out the dead. The special train with surgeons, stretchers, blankets, &c., which left here at 10.30 was drawn by two engines, but the engines, owing to the deep snow

It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Thomas' ELECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power, and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportions of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids consequently loses nothing by evaporation. Where applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparation nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial test of the people for any great length of time. One of these is THOMAS'S ELECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific men know that medicines may be made of several ingredients in certain proportions of greater power and curing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or from combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change
takes place forming a compound which
not by any possibility be made any combination or proportions of the ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made,
which produces the most astonishing
results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before used. It contains no alcohol or volatile liquids consequently loses
nothing by evaporation. Where applied
it has the benefit of every drop; whereas other preparations nearly all the oil is lost in that way, and you get but a small quantity of Oils which may contain.

CARE OF POULTRY IN WINTER.

The following hints as to the proper care of poultry in the cold weather are given by a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker.

"Examine the interior of the houses and see that they are tight. If you expect a goodly stock of eggs from your fowl, you must keep their houses warm, and there is no better way of doing this than by lining the house with strong paper. It is the cheapest lining, and if saturated with a moderately strong solution of carbolic acid, will keep vermin at bay. Don't say that this is 'too much trouble.' So it is a trouble to bed the cattle and feed the stock, but you must expect to take some trouble if you demand a profit from them. Don't begrudge trouble in the fowl-house. The result will be seen in the filing of the egg-basket and there is no portion of the farm that will pay a higher percentage of profit on the outlay of labour than the hen-yards.

"Clean out the nest, wash them with either kerosene or carbolic acid, and put a fresh straw in the bottoms. A dirty box will make a willing layer steal her nest. Bear that in mind as a golden rule, and you won't have to spend so many hours in the woods searching after runaway hens.

"The nights are becoming longer and colder. See that the fowl have before dusk, a few handfuls of whole corn and a comfortable roost. If your fowl are to be kept in health, they must not be left all night with empty crops, nor allowed to roost in exposed places. The plan of allowing a fowl the exquisite privilege of roosting on 'a rickety bean and an empty crop,' is anything but economical. Don't have the roosts one above the other, or the birds will be continually fighting for the highest place.

"Before you go to bed take a look at the chickens. There is no better time to inspect them than when they are quiet on the perch. I make it a rule to go through my fowl house every night. I have been singularly fortunate in the health of my flock, and I ascribe it to practice. Passing along the roost, which is low, you glance at each bird, and being accustomed to their face it is wonderful how soon you will learn to detect the first symptoms of illness. The altered appearance of the bird from the evening before strikes you almost instantly, and the trouble being taken at the start, you can at once remove the bird and stop the disease from spreading through the flock.

"If you have an old window-sash about the place, for which you have no special use, put an extra light in the southern or eastern end of the fowl house. I will be grateful to the fowls in winter, on cold days, when they will huddle together in the house to escape the biting winds. The sash will enable them to bask in the sunlight without going out of the house, and the increased good health of the chickens will repay your trouble.

"Those who intend to house birds for the winter should let them run as much as possible now, while the grass is green. Don't shut them up until the last moment, and they will so much the better bear the winter's confinement.

"Lastly, feed your fowl liberally, and they will return it to you with interest. Keep them cleanly and disease will be a rarity. House them comfortably and they will lay regularly."

IMPROVING THE WINTER.

Inexperienced individuals and in-door speculators would sometimes attempt to tell us the winter life on the farm affords the farmer an abundance of leisure, or in other words, that there is little work that can be accomplished to advantage during the season in which frosts bind the earth. Such individuals, apparently, know very

VARIOUS ITEMS.

A large amount of light wood was confiscated in the case of the 3rd Inst. The poor had the benefit of it.

The hardware store of Messrs Short & Co., Woodstock, was destroyed by fire on the 28th inst. Loss $14,000; insured.

John Burr, a farmer 84 years of age, fell down stairs at Tilsenburgh on Christmas day, and broke his neck.

Talking about epitaphs, a stone in the cemetery of St Ouen, Paris, bears the simple inscription, without name or date, "Alles vous-en!" "Get out!"

Mr. John Campbell, of Brooklyn, died on the 23rd inst., aged 82 years. He at one time represented the County of Frontenac in the Legislature of Upper Canada.

THE LATEST. It is now said that the world will collapse about the last of February, 1877. Those who entertain thoughts of a future should bear the above in mind.

"You can't make a whistle out of a pig's tail" has become a proverbial saying. A Picton man has proved the contrary, having actually made a whistle and a good one, too, from the caudal extremity of a hog.

A religious conflict is in progress in Thompsonville, Conn. Mrs. Greenbalch, a Methodist, battered her Unitarian son's nose because he would not acknowledge the truth of the doctrine of sanctification. He had her arrested, and the end is not yet.

A singular marriage procession was seen in the Bois de Boulogne, Paris, recently, the parties being mounted on velocipedes, each gentleman having a lady behind him, and the leading man playing a violin.

It is reported that the difficulty between the locomotive engineers and the management of the Grand Trunk Railway has been arranged, the engineers of all three grades accepting $2.75 per day.

A Cambridge University proctor in England has just been fined £15 for dragging an unfortunate woman by the heels through the streets of Cambridge at night, because he regarded her conduct as unseemly.

A memorial signed by most of the large business houses of New York has been presented to Congress, expressing satisfaction at the appointment of committees to consider the best mode of conducting the Presidential ballot, and expressing a hope that in dealing with this question all party considerations may be laid aside.

In the course of a speech by Joseph Arch before the Leigh Liberal Club, he said he ventured to tell Lord Beaconsfield that if he went to war he must not count on taking the agricultural labourers to be shot at for thirteen pence a day. They were determined that, until they had obtained the franchise, they would take no part in the wars of England.

New York, Dec. 26.—An Atlantic despatch says that Jim Jackson, in gaol at Decatur, charged with robbery and murder, committed suicide on Sunday night by hanging with a pocket handkerchief, through fear of falling into the hands of a mob who surrounded the gaol for the purpose of lynching him. The sheriff was defending the gaol at the time with a posse of sixty men.

Hydrophobia appears to be alarmingly on the increase in England. The number of cases credited to it from 1850 to 1864, both years inclusive, was 25; from 1870 to 1874 it was 216. "And," says the Saturday Review, "there is also every reason to believe that last year and this year will be found, when the reports are

IMPROVING THE WINTER.

Inexperienced individuals and in-door speculators would sometimes attempt to tell us the winter life on the farm affords the farmer an abundance of leisure, or in other words, that there is little work that can be accomplished to advantage during the season in which frosts bind the earth. Such individuals, apparently, know very little of actual farm life. Farmers who would work their way to success and a competency against old age, adopt the maxim of "Poor Richard"—"He that by the plow would thrive, himself must either hold or drive"—and act from that principle; do their own work so far as is possible, with as little hired help as can be got along with. The young farmer who has to work his way up the ladder of wealth commencing with only very limited means, cannot make head way by depending entirely upon hired labor. He must work with his own hands, while at the same time he employs his brain and all other faculties.

Winter brings its cares, as well as spring and summer. Stock must be kept at the barn and cared for, instead of caring for themselves at pasture. This of itself is no small care, taking up several hours daily, were thoroughly well done, such as cutting, hauling and preparing wood, preparing fence stuff, threshing, stripping of tobacco (where that is grown), hauling manure, getting out timber, boards, &c., for improvements, moving stones when necessary, preparing bean poles or pea brush, and the thousands and one other little things which are always coming up and need attention on a well regulated farm. These must be done now, or during a more busy season, and economy would indicate that the winter season is the better time. Plans are formed, new tools are sought out, old ones repaired, and extended information is gained from reading and intercourse with his fellow farmers. No farmer who would be up with the times, and does business worthy to entitle him to the name of even a small farmer, need be idle, even though the soil cannot be cultivated. In my experience and observation, very few progressive and raising farmers spend much of their time unemployed although very much of the labor may seem of little present profit to the mere looker-on.

MANURE IN WINTER.

Manure may be applied to some trees and plants with much advantage in early winter. Dwarf garden trees and gooseberry and currant bushes, which do not grow with sufficient vigor, may be mulched with manure, and what is not washed into the ground before spring may be then spaded in. Dwarf pear trees, which in exposed places are liable to be injured by the freezing of the soil, are benefited by the winter covering and by the enriching of the soil. It is not too late to apply a dressing of manure to asparagus beds which have not yet received any. By some attention, much may be done to prevent the waste of manure as it accumulates during winter. The droppings in hen houses should be regularly swept up and deposited in stout barrels, with alternating layers of some good absorbent. Road dust is best, but if none was saved in summer, use well sifted coal ashes. If the road dust is laid aside.

In the course of a speech by Joseph Arch before the Leigh Liberal Club, he said he ventured to tell Lord Beaconsfield that if he went to war he must not count on taking the agricultural labourers to be shot at for thirteen pence a day. They were determined, that, until they had obtained the franchise, they would take no part in the wars of England.

New York, Dec. 26.—An Atlantic despatch says that Jim Jackson, in gaol at Decatur, charged with robbery and murder, committed suicide on Sunday night by hanging with a pocket handkerchief, through fear of falling into the hands of a mob who surrounded the gaol for the purpose of lynching him. The sheriff was defending the gaol at the time with a posse of sixty men.

Hydrophobia appears to be alarmingly on the increase in England. The number of cases credited to it from 1850 to 1864, both years inclusive, was 25; from 1870 to 1874 it was 216. "And," says the Saturday Review, "there is also every reason to believe that last year and this year will be found, when the reports are complete, to have been marked by a further increase."

Dr. Harry Spry of the East India Company, speaking of the graceful carriage of Hindoo girls, believes that the exercise of carrying small vessels of water on the head without using the hands to balance might be introduced advantageously into boarding schools and private families, and that it would entirely supersede the present machinery of dumb bells, calisthenics, skipping ropes, &c.

ANOTHER WEATHER PROPHECY.—Mr. Vennor, the weather prophet, makes the following statement:—"We shall have a great deal of snow in January, and there is a considerable amount of snow in store for us during the winter of 1877. There will be another very cold snap in January as well as a pretty general thaw, and another severe one in February. More snow will fall before New Year's day, and it is my impression that this next fall will be a heavy one in Montreal, but the whole winter will be a short one."

The Grangers of the township of Sidney talk of building a dock—and probably a store-house also—somewhere on the bay shore. A location for a wharf and the necessary timber and stone to be used in its construction, have been offered by three parties, but the site, as yet, has not been decided on. They complain of the grading done at Oswego, and say it is altogether too fine, and that hereafter if they do not receive fair treatment there they will send their grain to New York or Albany.

BELLEVEILLE, Dec 27. —A horse and cutter have been stolen from Mr. John Nicholson, livery man in this town, a number of men went to the house of a man named Gulliver, a witness for the prosecution in several liquor cases, and threatened to take his life if he appeared and testified; and further that he would be killed if he remained in town. In consequence he left a few hours later, and the cases in which he was to testify were laid over. An effort is being made to discover the perpetrators of this outrage, who have also threatened to shoot Mr. Ross, the License Inspector.—Ex.

GOOSE-BONE WEATHER PREDICTIONS.

A WRITER in the Louisville (Ky.) Commercial says the goose-bone is more closely watched in Kentucky than in any other part of the country. It has been handed down among the early traditions of the State, and may be called the Kentucky weather prophet. It is to be found in nearly every Kentucky country home, and in many parts of the State the farmers consult it, and prepare for handling their crops in accordance with its readings. The prophecy of the goose-bone does not extend beyond the year in which the goose was hatched, and the prediction is for the three winter months only. Take the breast-bone of a last Spring's goose and divide it into three equal parts, and possible, with a little hired help as can be got along with. The young farmer who has to work his way up the ladder of wealth commencing with only very limited means, cannot make head way by depending entirely upon hired labor. He must work with his own hands, while at the same time he employs his brain and all other faculties.

Winter brings its cares, as well as spring and summer. Stock must be kept at the barn and cared for, instead of caring for themselves at pasture. This of itself is no small care, taking up several hours daily, were thoroughly well done, such as cutting, hauling and preparing wood, preparing fence stuff, threshing, stripping of tobacco (where that is grown) hauling manure, getting out timber, boards, &c., for improvements, moving stones when necessary, preparing bean poles or pea brush, and the thousands and one other little things which are always coming up and need attention on a well regulated farm. These must be done now, or during a more busy season, and economy would indicate that the winter season is the better time. Plans are formed, new tools are sought out, old ones repaired, and extended information is gained from reading and intercourse with his fellow farmers. No farmer who would be up with the times, and does business worthy to entitle him to the name of even a small farmer, need be idle, even though the soil cannot be cultivated. In my experience and observation, very few progressive and raising farmers spend much of their time unemployed although very much of the labor may seem of little present profit to the mere looker-on.

MANURE IN WINTER.

Manure may be applied to some trees and plants with much advantage in early winter. Dwarf garden trees and gooseberry and currant bushes, which do not grow with sufficient vigor, may be mulched with manure, and what is not washed into the ground before spring may be then spaded in. Dwarf pear trees, which in exposed places are liable to be injured by the freezing of the soil, are benefited by the winter covering and by the enriching of the soil. It is not too late to apply a dressing of manure to asparagus beds which have not yet received any. By some attention, much may be done to prevent the waste of manure as it accumulates during winter. The droppings in hen houses should be regularly swept up and deposited in stout barrels, with alternating layers of some good absorbent. Road dust is best, but if none was saved in summer, use well sifted coal ashes. If the road dust is from clayey or loamy regions, layers of this and of the droppings, of equal thickness will answer; but if coal ashes are employed, there should be four or five times as much. Keep stables frequently and well littered, to save the liquid portions, and wheel out the contents as often as twice a day into a well made manure or compost heap. Where an abundance of straw could not be obtained, we have seen excellent manures made by daily spreading a coating of fresh sand, from a sand hole, kept open for this purpose, the stables being so warm as to prevent much freezing.

A GRAVE MISTAKE.—As a resident of Woodward avenue stood at his gate yesterday morning, a boy about thirteen years old came along with a snow shovel on his shoulder. "Ha! boy—come here—want a job?" called the gentleman. "Sir?" answered the boy with great dignity. "Pitch the snow off my walk and I'll give you a quarter," continued the Avenuer. "Sir! you don't know me" said the lad as he marched on. "I am on my way to clear the walks in front of father's fourteen lots up here. All our eighteen horses are lame, and our gold-mounted snow-plough is out of order, or else you wouldn't see me carrying this shovel around. I'm offering $5 to any one who will carry it up as far as Parsons street."—Detroit Free Press.

hands to balance might be introduced advantageously into boarding schools and private families, and that it would entirely supersede the present machinery of dumb bells, calisthenics, skipping ropes, &c.

ANOTHER WEATHER PROPHECY.—Mr. Vennor, the weather prophet, makes the following statement:—"We shall have a great deal of snow in January, and there is a considerable amount of snow in store for us during the winter of 1877. There will be another very cold snap in January as well as a pretty general thaw, and another severe one in February. More snow will fall before New Year's day, and it is my impression that this next fall will be a heavy one in Montreal, but the whole winter will be a short one.

The Grangers of the township of Sidney talk of building a dock—and probably a store-house also—somewhere on the bay shore. A location for a wharf and the necessary timber and stone to be used in its construction, have been offered by three parties, but the site, as yet, has not been decided on. They complain of the grading done at Oswego, and say it is altogether too fine, and that hereafter if they do not receive fair treatment there they will send their grain to New York or Albany.

BELLEVILLE, Dec 27.—A horse and cutter have been stolen from Mr. John Nicholson, livery man in this town, a number of men went to the house of a man named Gulliver, a witness for the prosecution in several liquor cases, and threatened to take his life if he appeared and testified; and further that he would be killed if he remained in town. In consequence he left a few hours later, and the cases in which he was to testify were laid over. An effort is being made to discover the perpetrators of this outrage, who have also threatened to shoot Mr. Ross, the License Inspector.—Ex.

Goose-bone Weather Predictions.

A WRITER in the Louisville (Ky.) Commercial says the goose-bone is more closely watched in Kentucky than in any other part of the country. It has been handed down among the early traditions of the State, and may be called the Kentucky weather prophet. It is to be found in nearly every Kentucky country home, and in many parts of the State the farmers consult it, and prepare for handling their crops in accordance with its readings. The prophecy of the goose-bone does not extend beyond the year in which the goose was hatched, and the prediction is for the three Winter months only. Take the breast-bone of a last Spring's goose and divide it into three equal parts, and the different divisions will represent December, January and February. The breast-bone of a goose is translucent, and if clear when held up to the light, the weather will be mild and pleasant; but, if covered with cloudless blots, it will be gloomy and cold; the heavier the blots the colder will be the weather. A study of this year's goose-bone indicates that the weather for December will be cloudy and gloomy, probably with much rain and snow, not very cold, but withal, a very disagreeable month. About the last of December we shall have some cold weather, which will continue to grow colder as January advances. The month of January will be a cold one throughout, with some very severe weather during the last part of the month. On the prophecy of the goose-bone it may be predicted that about the last of January we will have the coldest weather experienced for a number of years. February will be more pleasant and Spring-like, betokening an early return of the flowers. During the last of the month, however, there will be a few cold days, but no severe weather. Such is the prophecy of the goose-bone, and as we have the word of a good old farmer up in Woodford County that it has not failed for fifty-years, we may as well prepare to meet it, and need not be surprised if we have good skating on the Ohio River during the latter part of January.

CATARRH

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Cat-
arrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING.
"DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your UN-STUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-
nine years old; had been out of health for about
five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-
ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual
dropping in the throat and down upon the
lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced taking your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an
improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chop-
ping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY NIDER,

A SOUTH SEA PIRATE.

THE REMARKABLE EXPLOITS OF CAPT. JOHN HAYES.

HOW HE DECEIVED THE CAPTAIN OF A TUG-BOAT—STEALING A BRITISH SCHOONER AT BANGKOK—ON THE HIGH SEAS AGAIN—A SINGULAR STORY.

The ordinary landsman, passing along the water front a few weeks ago, as he brushed by an elderly-looking, well-dressed ago harbor, in the island of Tetuilla, one of the Navigators, that she obtained any information as to the pirate's whereabouts. There Capt. Meade learned that Hayes, with his bark, was in Api harbor, and he at once started after his prize. When five miles off the harbor the steamer hoisted French colors, about two miles off, English colors, and, when close in, American colors, proclaiming her true nationality. An armed boat was sent on board the bark, and Hayes was seized. He was subsequently tried, but owing to the obstacles thrown in the way by the consular officials, and the absolute terror all his sailors had of testifying against him, a conviction could not be obtained, and he was set at liberty.

His feet were hardly safe on his bark when another war vessel was after him. The owners of the British schooner had duly notified their government of their loss, and just about the time Hayes was liberated by the United States authorities, her Britannic Majesty's ship Pearl received orders to cruise in search of him. The Pearl sailed a long while before she came in sight of the bark, but Hayes discovered at his favorite retreat, Strong's Island. This island has a natural harbor with only one outlet, a reef forming a breakwater, and inside this the pirate bark lay anchored, her stern toward the reef. The British took up a position commanding the outlet, and it was evident to Hayes that the game was up. He paid out his cable and let the stern of the bark come on to the rocks, so that in a short time she would bump the stern out of herself and sink. He then took a boat and going out to the steamer offered to pilot her in, informing the Captain that "pirate Hayes" had sunk his ship and made his escape to another island. Before the British discovered that he had been deceived, Hayes succeeded in escaping in a whaleboat with his companions. The only one of the crew of the bark was captured was a young English boy named Beck, who was found on the island. He was tried in Sidney about two years ago, and acquitted as it was evident that the boy acted in terror of his life.

Nothing further was heard of Hayes until about eighteen months ago at Malta when it was reported by an American whaler that he was around among the Philippine Islands, and as the Spanish Government confine political prisoners on some of the island of the group, the authorities sent a man-of-war to look after him. The war vessel was too late, for when she touched at one of the smaller penal settlements, she found that 160 convicts had escaped on the schooner. Captain Hayes was, strange to say, on the island, and he told the Spanish officers that he had gone on shore to swim, and that the convicts had seized his schooner and overpowered his crew while he was on shore. The Spaniards thought this story altogether too fishy, and brought him to Manila, where he was imprisoned for nine months in rigorous style, the result being that his health broke down, and he was almost at the point of death. The survivors say that they could not hear their comrades praying the "Lord's Prayer" which the British sailors sang in unison—as seem to have been customary with them—even heard by those on shore, when the tide momentarily subsided. Two hours the imperilled men thus encouraged each other. But about o'clock the endurance of some of the weaker ones gave way, and three or four were washed from the lower rigging above could only look on in helplessness without power to save or help. Half an hour later even these were thrown into the water by the fall of the mast, carrying the rigging over the side nearest shore, where it instantly sank, carrying down all who were lashed to it. The ship's officers and an engineer of the Wrecking Company had not seen themselves in this way, and as the ship was sinking they found themselves freed from it. After a short struggle they got hold of a cork buoy below one of the ship's boats, and floated ashore with it in an exhausted condition. The wreckers on the beach ran instantly to their assistance. All were insensible from cold. They were carried to the station, where fires had been built, beds prepared; their stiffly frozen clothing was torn from them, and their bodies almost as stiff, were placed in the blankets and were poured down their throats the friction of warm hands was plied to their limbs. Three of them brought to consciousness in a short time but the fourth struggled between life and death through four hours of unconsciousness, finally recovering.

MORE MONSTER MUNITIONS. GIGANTIC DEATH ENGINE

We believe we are correct in saying that an important step has been taken within the last two or three days in reference to the question of heavy armaments for the British service. We understand that the Admiralty have asked to be furnished with designs for a gun which shall be capable of sending a projectile through 36 inches of armour at a distance of 1,000 yards. It does not appear anything has yet been said as to the weight or length of the gun, or as to the weight or diameter of the projectile. This seems to be left in the first instance to the judgement of the Royal Gunfoundries.

It is within the limits of probability that the "coming gun" British will weigh 200 tons. But such weight is scarcely necessary for the work which a gun of war is asked to perform. It depends on length, for a long gun is proportion to its foot ton of energy like a lever weapon than a shorter gun, and both to be made on the same system. A gun be increased in length, the work can be got out of it with redoubled pressure. If the new gun is to be a 200 tons would seem to be inevitable.

A SOUTH SEA PIRATE.

THE REMARKABLE EXPLOITS OF CAPT. JOHN HAYES.

HOW HE DECEIVED THE CAPTAIN OF A TUG-BOAT—STEALING A BRITISH SCHOONER AT BANGKOKA—ON THE HIGH SEAS AGAIN—A SINGULAR STORY.

The ordinary landsman, passing along the water front a few weeks ago, as he brushed by an elderly-looking, well-dressed man, whose beard descending swept his aged breast, would feel inclined to laugh in the face of the man who would tell him he had just jolted a pirate. Yet it is true that hardly more than three weeks ago the schooner Lotus left this port for Apia in command of a gentleman whose description we have already given, and whose piratical exploits would fill volumes—who has been given employment to men-of-war of three nations. The gentleman in question is Capt. John Hayes, alias "Bull Hayes, the Pirate of the South Sea."

At what time in the past John Hayes first imbibed his taste for a pirate's life—whether as a schoolboy from the dime novel, or when older grown from the weird yarns spun by ancient mariners in the middle watch, or when listening to the baritone voices of the rough tars as they celebrated in song the deeds of Captain Kidd, the "Blacksnake Privateer," or those who went

"Sailing on into Panama bay,
The mighty buccaners!"—

is unknown; but the old buccanier spirit wherever imbibed, contained its full sway over him about 1862, when he was engaged to command a lumber bark. She was lying off Stewart street wharf, ready to discharge, when one night, without troubling the Custom House for his clearance papers, he fished his anchor and silently stole away in the night with the cargo of lumber, to parts unknown. He is supposed to have sold the lumber at some Mexican port.

The next thing heard of him was from Macay, where his bark was chartered to bring coolies to Sydney. At that time the Australian Government, in order to restrict Chinese immigration, had imposed a capitation tax of $25 on each coolie landed, and the money to pay this had been advanced to Capt. Hayes by the charterers before the vessel left Macay. He had 250 coolies on board, which at $25 a head amounted to $6,250, which he determined to pocket, and seek fresh fields with his gallant bark. A large portion of the cargo space in both slavers and coolie ships is given up to the water casks, and Hayes had a quantity of water casks left which he "staved"—i. e. knocked the heads out of—off Sydney Heads until he had no inconsiderable amount of water in his hold. The confiding captain of a tug, observing the dangerous looking stream of clear water rising from pumps of the vessel, came along side and offered assistance. Capt. Hayes stated that he thought he could keep his ship afloat and bring her in next morning if relieved of his cargo of coolies, and asked the captain of the tug to take them on shore for him and then tow the bark in. In an evil hour the tug received the coolies, and headed towards the city. On her return, having landed her coolies, the tug found Capt. Hayes and his bark non est. The owner made his escape to another island. Before the Britisher discovered that he had been deceived, Hayes succeeded in escaping in a whaleboat with his companions. The only one of the crew of the bark was captured was a young English boy named Beck, who was found on the island. He was tried in Sidney about two years ago, and acquitted as it was evident that the boy acted in terror of his life.

Nothing further was heard of Hayes until about eighteen months ago at Malta when it was reported by an American whaler that he was around among the Philippine Islands, and as the Spanish Government confine political prisoners on some of the island of the group, the authorities sent a man-of-war to look after him. Captain Hayes was, strange to say, on the island, and he told the Spanish officers that he had gone on shore to swim, and that the convicts had seized his schooner and overpowered his crew while he was on shore. The Spaniards thought this story altogether too fishy, and brought him to Manila, where he was imprisoned for nine months in rigorous style, the result being that his health broke down, and he was almost at the point of death when he was set at liberty. He was sent by the American consul to this port as a distressed seaman, although when he landed on the bark Whistler, about April or May last, he had three chests of clothes, valuable instruments, and $10,000, which he had been paid by the friends of the political convicts. How he arrived at this on to his treasure through all his sufferings is a mystery.

About six weeks ago he left San Francisco in the schooner Lotus, well known to our yachting men, which he got from her owner, Captain Moody. He carried away with him $5,000 in cargo and money, and the knowing ones on the city front shake their heads and say that Stenberger's friends have something to do with this voyage, and that we may soon expect to hear something from Sumot. Hayes, with all his faults, has friends who speak well of him. He has betrayed his trust, he has stolen, and rumor says that he has committed murder. Indeed, it is evident that it could only be at the point of the pistol he or any man like him could keep his crew in order, and his friends all confess that he care little about killing a man. Those who wish to speak well of him tell many tales of his daring in saving life from shipwreck and his tenderness to the survivors.

WRECK OF THE CIRCASSIAN.

TWENTY-SEVEN LIVES LOST ON LONG ISLAND.

The British iron ship Circassian, which went ashore on Long Island, near Bridgehampton, on December 11th, finally broke to pieces during the gale of last Friday night, and now strews the beach for miles along the south coast of the island. Her captain and three engineers of the Coast Wrecking Company, and ten Long Island wreckers—in all 27, out of a wrecking crew of 31 persons—lashed themselves to the iron mast, and when the vessel suddenly broke up, sank with it, not 200 yards from the shore, where a great crowd of wreckers, life salvors, and others, including the wives and families of some of the lost, looked on utterly helpless to save.

What occurred on the ship has been gathered fragmentarily from the four survivors of the wreck, and connected forms a grim story of terrible suffering. When the stern hawsers were loosened the ship swung around a little, and began to "thump" on the bar with every gust of wind that struck her. As the gale increased she thumped the heavier, and before six o'clock it was discovered that she was leaking. The water suddenly rose several inches above the lower deck; the ship's boats were beaten to pieces against her sides; the fires in the cook's galley were put out; the crew who were at supper, were driven to the upper deck for shelter, and the lower deck became a

GIANTIC DEATH ENGINE

We believe we are correct in saying that an important step has been taken within the last two or three days with reference to the question of heavy gun for the British service. We understand that the Admiralty have asked to be furnished with designs for a gun which shall be capable of sending a projectile through 36 inches of armour at a distance of 1,000 yards. It does not appear that anything has yet been said as to the weight or length of the gun, or as to the weight or diameter of the projectile. A this seems to be left in the first instance to the judgement to the Royal Gun Factories.

It is within the limits of probability that the "coming gun" British navy will weigh 200 tons. But such weight scarcely necessary for the work which the engine of war is asked to perform. Much depends on length, for a long gun is proportion to its foot ton of energy lighter weapon than a shorter gun, presuming both to be made on the same system. A gun be increased in length, the same work can be got out of it with reduced pressure. If the new gun is to be a shot one, 200 tons would seem to be inevitable. If greater length be permitted, the less weight may suffice, and a really better gun will be produced. As for cost, we have on a former occasion put it at $25,000. The price of the Elswick gun 100 tons is understood to be £16,000. Whatever the size, the new weapon will be a muzzle-loading rifle gun of the Fraser construction, built up with massive wrought iron coils on a steel tube. The metal for the tube will doubtless be supplied by Messrs. T. Firth & Son, of Sheffield, the eminent manufacturers, who supply the steel for the interior tubes of all the Government guns, as likewise of the guns made by Sir W. Armstrong. The time occupied in making the proposed gun is not likely to be much less than two years.

It must not be supposed that in asking for a piece of ordnance such as that, we have endeavored to describe, the British Admiralty are making an extravagant demand. In fact they could scarcely afford to, and it they have erred at all it is by not requiring something greater. Possibly the proposal may be enlarged, but we take it as it stands, and we think that nation may be congratulated on the enterprise which it is thus entering upon. It is evident that our naval authorities are conscious of the necessity which exists for further progress in the scale of heavy guns. We cannot consider a gun of 1 or 200 tons a final step, but it is a considerable one, and exceeds anything which we have yet heard of elsewhere. If guns are spoken of which threaten to come very close to it. Thus it has been stated for some time past that H. Krupp is making a steel gun of 150 tons. Very lately we have heard that it is proposed to make a steel gun of that weight in France, at the famous Creuzot works of Messrs. Schneider. The Schneider firm are enormously wealthy, as indicated by their immense works, employing 1,000 hands. The resources of Sir Armstrong are also abundant for the purpose of making something larger than a gun of 100 tons. There is likewise a certainty of armor being produced which will require to be attacked by guns such as those which England now proposes to have.

SENSATIONS OF STARVING.

For the first two days through which a strong and healthy man is doomed to exist upon nothing his sufferings are perhaps more acute than in the remaining stages—he feels an inordinate unspeakable craving at the stomach night and day. The mind runs upon beef, bread, and other substantial, but still in a great measure the body retains its strength. On the third and fourth this incessant craving gives place to a sinking and weakness of the stomach accompanied by nausea. The unfortunate sufferer still desires food, but with a loss of strength he loses the

At what time in the past John Hayes first imbibed his taste for a pirate's life—whether as a schoolboy from the dime novel, or when older grown from the weird yarns spun by ancient mariners in the middle watch, or when listening to the baritone voices of the rough tars as they celebrated in song the deeds of Captain Kidd, the "Blacksnake Privateer," or those who went

"Sailing on into Panama bay, The mighty buccaners"—is unknown; but the old buccaneer spirit wherever imbibed, contained its full sway over him about 1862, when he was engaged to command a lumber bark. She was lying off Stewart street wharf, ready to discharge, when one night, without troubling the Custom House for his clearance papers, he fished his anchor and silently stole away in the night with the cargo of lumber, to parts unknown. He is supposed to have sold the lumber at some Mexican port.

The next thing heard of him was from Macay, where his bark was chartered to bring coolies to Sydney. At that time the Australian Government, in order to restrict Chinese immigration, had imposed a capitation tax of $25 on each coolie landed, and the money to pay this had been advanced to Capt. Hayes by the charterers before the vessel left Macao. He had 250 coolies on board, which at $25 a head amounted to $6,250, which he determined to pocket, and seek fresh fields with his gallant bark. A large portion of the cargo space in both slavers and coolie ships is given up to the water casks, and Hayes had a quantity of water casks left which he "staved"—i. e., knocked the heads out of—off Sydney Heads until he had no inconsiderable amount of water in his hold. The confiding captain of a tub, observing the dangerous looking stream of clear water rising from pumps of the vessel, came along side and offered assistance. Capt. Hayes stated that he thought he could keep his ship afloat and bring her in next morning if relieved of his cargo of coolies, and asked the captain of the tug to take them on shore for him and then tow the bark in. In an evil hour the tug received the coolies, and headed towards the city. On her return, having landed her coolies, the tug found Capt. Hayes and his bark on est. The owners of the tug had to pay the $25 per head on the 250 coolies.

Our gay buccaneer turned up at Bangkok, on the coast of Siam, where, observing a handsome British schooner lying at anchor, he resolved to steal her. He arranged with his mate to bring the bark to Strong's Island, and to await him there; and then, going on shore, he managed to pick up acquaintance with the owner of the schooner, to whom he offered a tempting price for her. The schooner consented to sell, and Hayes got leave to take a few of his men in the vessel on a trial trip. He sailed on the trial trip, and Bangkok knew him no more. He brought the schooner to Hong Kong, where he sold the cargo of rice with which she was loaded, and sailed for Strong's Island without exciting suspicion on the part of the authorities of the port. When he reached Strong's Island he found the bark lying there, with the mate in charge, and loading the schooner with oil and other products of the island. He sent her back to Hong Kong in charge of the mate. The latter by this time was sick of a life which sooner or later he saw might bring him to the yard arm for gallows, and the moment he reached Hong Kong he sold the schooner and her cargo for what he could get, and fled.

The United States consular authorities by this time were alive to the fact that a genuine pirate was cruising in the South Seas, and the United States war steamer Narragansett, Capt. Meade, was ordered to look after Hayes. The steamer Narragansett cruised about for some time, visiting a number of South Sea Islands, but it was not until she entered Pagon-

her owner, Captain Meev. He carried away with him $5,000 in cargo and money, and the knowing ones on the city front shake their heads and say that Stemberger's friends have something to do with this voyage, and that we may soon expect to hear something from Samot. Hayes, with all his faults, has friends who speak well of him. He has betrayed his trust, he has stolen, and rumor says that he has committed murder. Indeed, it is evident that it could only be at the point of the pistol he or any man like him could keep his crew in order, and his friends all confess that he was little about killing a man. Those who wish to speak well of him tell many tales of his daring in saving life from shipwreck and his tenderness to the survivors.

The crew barricaded them again, but the ship settled over on her left side against the bar, where she continued to "thump, thump, thump," as if she would go to pieces at any moment. Finally the crew heard the creaking noise which accompanies the breaking up of a ship; they even distinguished the iron nuts flying from the bolts which bound the ship's pieces together, and saw the planks of the deck heaving up, and before midnight, with the sea sweeping over her, her "back broken," and both bow and stern opened, and the whole vessel settled as low as the depth of water permitted. Captain Williams gave the order to take to the rigging and to lash themselves to the mast. Nearly all the crew seem to have done this; the four rescued ones failed to take this precaution of lashing themselves fast.

The crew were in this perilous and exposed position for fully four hours before the mast to which they were lashed fell into the water. The weather was intensely cold. Wherever the spray struck the rigging or the clothing of the wretched men it instantly froze. They could see the crowds on shore vainly endeavoring to throw a life-line to the ship, and running about in every direction along the beach looking for bodies which might be washed to the land. Neither the encouraging shouts which the people on the beach sent up nor the boom of the mortar could be heard above the fierce whistling of the wind in the rigging and the groans of the creaking timbers and sides of the ship slowly beating to pieces.

The mind runs upon beef, bread, or other substantial, but still in a great measure the body retains its strength. On the third and fourth this incessant craving gives place to a sinking and weakness of the stomach accompanied by nausea. The unfortunate sufferer still desires food but with a loss of strength he loses his eager craving which is felt in the earlier stages. Should he chance to obtain morsel or two of food he swallows it with a wolfish avidity; but five minutes afterwards his suffering are more intense than ever. He feels as he had swallowed a living lobster, which is clawing and feeling upon very foundation of his existence. On the fifth day his cheeks suddenly appear hollow and sunken, his body attenuated his color is ashy pale, and his eyes wild, glassy and cannibalistic. The different parts of the system now war with each other. The stomach calls upon the legs to go with it in quest of food; the legs from weakness refuse. The sixth day brings with it increased suffering, although the pangs of hunger are lost in an overpowering languor and sickness. The head becomes giddy—the ghosts of some well remembered dinner pass in hideous procession through the mind. The seventh day comes, bringing increasing lassitude and further prostration of strength. The arms hang lifeless the legs draw heavily. The desire for food is still left to a degree, but it may be brought—not sought. The miserable remnant of life which still hangs to the sufferer is almost too precious to be hurried yet his inherent love of existence induces a desire still to preserve it, if it can be saved without a task to bodily exertion. The mind wanders. At one time I think his weary limbs cannot sustain him a mile; the next he is endowed with unnatural strength, and if there be a certainty of relief before him he dashes bravely and strongly forward, wondering when precedes his new and sudden impulse.

harbor, in the island of Tetuilla, one of the Navigators, that she obtained information as to the pirate's whereabouts. There Capt. Meade learned that yes, with his bark, was in Api harbor, and he at once started after his prize. Within five miles off the harbor the ancor hoisted French colors, about two miles off, English colors, and, when close, Americans' colors, proclaiming her true nationality. An armed boat was sent on board the bark, and Hayes was seized, was subsequently tried, but owing to obstacles thrown in the way by the solar officials, and the absolute terror his sailors had of testifying against him, a conviction could not be obtained. He was set at liberty.

His feet were hardly safe on his bark, when another war vessel was after him. The owners of the British schooner had notified their government of their capture, and just about the time Hayes was released by the United States authorities, her Britannic Majesty's ship Pearl sailed orders to cruise in search of him. The bark sailed a long while before she was overtaken.

He was recovered at his favorite retreat, Strong's Island. This island has a natural harbor, and only one outlet, a reef forming a breakwater, and inside this the pirate bark lay anchored, her stern toward the shore. The British took up a position commanding the outlet, and it was evident to Hayes that the game was up. He cut his cable and let the stern of the bark come up to the rocks, so that in a moment she would bump the stern of the British and sink. He then took a boat going out to the steamer offered to her in, informing the Captain that the bark "Hayes" had sunk his ship and his escape to another island. Before the British discovered that he had deceived, Hayes succeeded in escaping in a whaleboat with his companions. Only one of the crew of the bark was a young English boy named John, who was found on the island. He tried in Sidney about two years ago, acquitted as it was evident that the deed in terror of his life.

Nothing further was heard of Hayes for about eighteen months ago at Malta, it was reported by an American officer that he was around among the Lipari Islands, and as the Spanish government confine political prisoners on one of the island of the group, the British sent a man-of-war to look for him. The war vessel was too late, when she touched at one of the Lipari penitentiaries, she found that convicts had escaped on the schooner. Hayes was, strange to say, on the island, and he told the Spanish officers that he had gone on shore to swim, and that the convicts had seized his boat and overpowered his crew while he was on shore. The Spaniards thought the story altogether too fishy, and sent him to Manila, where he was imprisoned for nine months in rigorous confinement, the result being that his health was down, and he was almost at the point of death when he was set at liberty. He was sent by the American consul to the survivors say that they could distinctly hear their comrades praying, and the "Lord's prayers" which the Indian warriors sang in unison—as seems to have been customary with them—were answered by those on shore, whenever the smoke momentarily subsided. For two hours the imperilled men thus encouraged each other. But about four o'clock the endurance of some of the weaker ones gave way, and three or four were washed from the lower rigging; those above could only look on in horror, without power to save or help. Half an hour later even these were thrown into the water by the fall of the mast, carrying the rigging over the side nearest the shore, where it instantly sank, carrying down all who were lashed to it. Three of the ship's officers and an engineer of the Wrecking Company had not secured themselves in this way, and as the mast and rigging sank they found themselves freed from it. After a short struggle they got hold of a cork buoy belonging to one of the ship's boats, and floated ashore with it in an exhausted condition. The wreckers on the beach ran instantly to their assistance. All were insensible from cold. They were carried to the life station, where fires had been built and beds prepared; their stiffly frozen clothing was torn from them, and their bodies, almost as stiff, were placed in the beds; stimulants were poured down their throats and the friction of warm hands was applied to their limbs. Three of them were brought to consciousness in a short time, but the fourth struggled between life and death through four hours of unconsciousness, finally recovering.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

THIRD PARLIAMENT—SECOND SESSION.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Toronto, 3rd Jan., 1877.

The second session of the third Parliament of the Legislature of Ontario was opened yesterday by his honor the Lieutenant-Governor, who left Government House at about 3 o'clock, escorted by the Governor-General's Body-guard. A company of the Tenth Royals formed a guard of honor at the Parliament Buildings, and the usual salute was fired by a battery of the Garrison Artillery.

His Honor entered at seven minutes after three, attended by Col. R. L. Denison, B. M., Col. Goodwin, Capt. Grant, and Sheriff Jarvis. His Honor was then pleased to open the session with the following:—

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly.

I have much pleasure in welcoming you again to your annual duties in connection with the legislation and government of the Province.

I rejoice to have it in my power to announce that the learned Commissioners for the Consolidation of the Statutes have completed their important and laborious undertaking, and that the result is ready to be submitted to you. I hope that it will be found practicable to give to the people of the Province at your present session the benefit of this work, with such amendments in the existing laws as your wisdom may suggest or approve. Bills employing various amendments which have the recommendation of the Commissioners will be laid before you.

A measure giving votes to the sons of farmers in certain cases will be submitted for your consideration. Also, a Bill for extending the Voters' Lists Act, with necessary modification, to Municipal elections.

Further progress and improvement may be looked for in the great cause of education, now that it has reached another stage of development under the Act of last session, which was assigned the administration of educational affairs to a responsible Department. It is proposed to ask your assistance towards improving the qualifications of teachers, and in securing, to all the schools, teachers properly trained in the best method of teaching.

Reports will be laid before you as to the working of the law respecting the sale of fermented and spirituous liquors under the Act of last Session. It will be seen that the Act has already had a beneficial effect in diminishing the evils against which it was directed. A Bill will be offered for your consideration embodying some amendments which have been suggested by experience, as calculated to advance the efficient working of the law.

An agreement has been arrived at with the Government of the Dominion for the purchase of the Rockwood Lunatic

THE TOWER OF LONDON.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY OF HISTORICAL REMAINS.

Some very interesting and important historical discoveries have been made during the past few days by the Officers of works in their restoration of certain parts of the Tower of London. The special scene in their labors has been the church of St. Peter ad Vincula, which forms the front of the White Tower. The Commission of Superintendence, under whose orders the work of removing the flooring and examining the various vaults took place, consisted of the secretary of the Board of Works, a well known surgeon, and a representative of the Constable of the Tower. It was not long before they came upon the coffin, or rather the light deal boxes in which those executed for State offences had been interred within the chapel precincts. By the aid of contemporary chronicles and registers a very fair idea of the remains of some was arrived at. Across the floor, in the centre of the chapel, was found the body of what was pronounced to be that of a woman of at least 70 years of age, which, according to all probability, was that of the Countess of Salisbury, the last of the Plantagenets, whose execution by Henry VII. was considered by most contemporary and subsequent statesmen as an inevitable necessity. Not far from this spot was discovered the body of a man of great stature and bulk, which would answer to the description given of Robert Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, the father of Lady Jane Grey. For some time it was doubted whether the facts of the head being found with the body did not upset this theory, but further search among the Tower records showed that in his case the usual formality of placing the head on London Bridge had been dispensed with. Close under the altar where the bones of a woman of excessively delicate proportions, showing that its owner was possessed of that "lacy neck" which Anne Boleyn told the executioner would give him no little trouble to sever. No trace has yet been found of anybody which can be identified as that of Lady Jane Grey, but the work of the commission is not yet terminated, and hopes are held out that the whole of the inmates of the vaults of St. Peter ad Vincula may sooner or later be identified. Meanwhile they are carefully gathered together and placed in leaden caskets, labelled respectively "supposed remains" of the historical character with whom they are most easily and logically associated.

WORK.

Yesterday I saw a rich man putting in his own coal, while a wretched laborer stood pleading in vain for the "job."

I know others who hire no servants, though they need them greatly, and would not find it any tax to pay them wages. And all these people think themselves entitled to praise as good, economical folks, who save all they can.

Winter is coming. Already revelations have been made which open our eyes to the fact that thousands of men and women willing to work have no hope whatever of employment. Cases of starvation are reported in the city, and men hitherto independent, mechanics who understand their trades, are applying to be sent to the almshouse. Of course, nothing but strong co-operation can help great numbers, but every one can help a little. Every one who has work to give can give it.

All over the country there are farmers who would not miss the food and moderate pay of capable men who could help them with the carpenter's and painter's work—the mending, the making, the altering that fences and buildings need in winter. The farmer has worked hard all summer: it will pay him to save his

For the first two days through which a strong and healthy man is doomed to exist upon nothing his sufferings are perhaps more acute than in the remaining stages—he feels an inordinate unspeakable craving at the stomach night and day. The mind runs upon beef, bread, and other substantial, but still in a great measure the body retains its strength. On the third and fourth this incessant craving gives place to a sinking and weakness of the stomach accompanied by nausea. The unfortunate sufferer still desires food but with a loss of strength he loses that eager craving which is felt in the earlier stages. Should he chance to obtain a morsel or two of food he swallows it with a wolfish avidity; but five minutes afterwards his suffering are more intense than ever. He feels as he had swallowed a living lobster, which is clawing and feeding upon very foundation of his existence. On the fifth day his cheeks suddenly appear hollow and sunken, his body attenuated his color is ashy pale, and his eyes wild, glassy and cannibalistic. The different parts of the system now war with each other. The stomach calls upon the legs to go with it in quest of food; the legs from weakness refuse. The sixth day brings with it increased suffering, although the pangs of hunger are lost in an overpowering languor and sickness. The head becomes giddy—the ghosts of some well remembered dinners pass in hideous procession through the mind. The seventh day comes, bringing increasing lassitude and further prostration of strength. The arms hang lifeless, the legs draw heavily. The desire for food is still left to a degree, but it must be brought—not sought. The miserable remnant of life which still hangs to the sufferer is almost to precious to be borne yet his inherent love of existence induces a desire still to preserve it, if it can be saved without a task to bodily exertion. The mind wanders. At one time he thinks his weary limbs cannot sustain him a mile; the next he is endowed with unnatural strength, and if there be a certainty of relief before him he dashes bravely and strongly forward, wondering whence proceeds his new and sudden impulse.

to the accommodation of the same, if our means of receiving and caring for these afflicted persons are to keep pace with the annual requirements which unhappily are to be anticipated.

I regret to find also that there is a necessity for increased accommodation for the blind and for deaf mutes. The propriety of an appropriation for additions to the existing establishment for the instruction of these unfortunate classes will therefore demand your humane consideration.

Notwithstanding the large sums hitherto applied in aid of important railway enterprises, urgent applications are made on behalf of some of the unfinished, as well as of the other projected railways, for fresh grants. I commend to your prudent attention any of these applications which may be brought before you.

The safety of the Records in the Crown Lands Department being of great importance to the whole community, I invite you to consider whether there is any sufficient reason for further delay in erecting such a fire-proof building as may afford the needed security in future.

It is with satisfaction I note that, while the laborious and prudent character of our people have saved us from much of the depression which still prevails in so many countries, their energy and intelligence are opening up new markets for the produce of the Province.

I rejoice to be able from a personal visit to give my testimony to the success which attended the exhibition of Canadian resources at Philadelphia. Too much credit cannot be given to the great zeal and the intelligent efforts which were displayed in every department by the people of Ontario, and which largely contributed to Canada's gaining a proud position in its rivalry with older and larger communities.

Since the last Session the differences between Ontario and Quebec have continued to receive the attention of my Government. Besides some correspondence on the subject, members of my Government met at Ottawa, by appointment, a Committee of the Government of Quebec; and, after discussion, a course of action, to obtain without further loss of time an authoritative decision as to the award of 1870, was mutually arranged; such a decision being found to be essential to either an acceptance of the award, or any settlement of the important matters embraced in it.

For the determination of the Provincial Boundaries by the agreed method of an arbitration, the appointment of a new arbitrator on behalf of the Province recently became necessary; the distinguished one who was to occupy that position having requested to be relieved from it. Meanwhile, a provisional line had been mutually determined upon, in terms of the resolution of the Legislative Assembly at a former session; a considerable amount of additional materials for the ascertainment of the ultimate boundaries had been collected; a new and an exhaustive statement of the case of Ontario had been prepared; and a considerable part of the documentary and other evidences affecting the questions at issue had been printed. Almost everything is now ready for the final decision, within a few months, by able and competent referees, of questions which for two centuries have given occasion to keen controversy, and often to fierce conflicts, between the nations, as well as the great public bodies, who have from time to time claimed portions of the disputed territory.

I have given directions that the public accounts for 1870 shall be laid before you.

The estimates for the various branches of the public services for the present year have been prepared, and will be submitted to you. You will find that they have been framed with every regard to economy as well as efficiency.

I trust that your deliberations will receive the Divine blessing, and will result in advancing the prosperity and happiness of all classes of the people.

His Honour then left the Chamber.

She has a tender heart, and cries over tales of sorrow. Let her remember that the greatest charity she can do this winter is to give some one work.

Let every one think what he can do, and if he has work to give, let him give it, and may God bless him for the deed.

THE WOODSMEN.

From an article on the Michigan pineries, in the Northwestern Lumberman, we extract the following:—

The style of axes differ with the nationalities. A Canadian chopper prefers a broad square blade with the weight more in the blade than elsewhere, the handles being short and thick. A down East logger, one from Maine, selects a large narrow head, the blade in crescent shape, the heaviest part in the top of the head above the eye. New York cutters select a broad, crescent shaped blade, the whole head rather short, and the weight balanced evenly above and below the eyes, that is, where the handle goes through. A Western backwoodsman selects a long blade, the corners only rounded off, and the eye holding the weight of the axe. The American chopper, as a rule, selects a long straight handle. The difference in handling is that a down East takes hold with both hands of the extreme end, and throws his blows easily and gracefully, with a long sweep over his shoulder. A Canuck chops from directly over his head, with the right hand well down on the handle to serve in jerking the blade out of the stick. A Westerner catches hold at the end of his handle, the hands about three inches apart, and delivers his blows rather directly from over the left shoulder.

In fact, an expert in the woods can tell the nationality or State a man has been reared in by seeing him hit one blow with an axe. It is, however, an interesting fact to know that a Yankee chopper, with his favorite axe and swinging cut, can, bodily strength being equal, do a fifth more work in the same time, than any other cutter, and be far less fatigued. This, in a very large degree, will account for the greater percentage of Maine men who will be found each year in the woods.

AN APPALLING CATASTROPHE IN A COLORADO MINE.

The Spanish mine, near the Dives, above Silver Plume, was the scene last Wednesday of an appalling tragedy.

The workings on the mine consist of a shaft eighty feet deep, from which a level is extended twenty feet, and at the end of the level is a shaft over a hundred feet in depth.

A party of Italians had leased the mine of Hanson & Co., and were working in the deep shaft on the day mentioned. About 9 a. m. Joseph Bernger came up the level and discovered that the shaft-house above was in flames. He at once gave the alarm to his comrades below and then made his way with great difficulty through the smoke and through the burning building to the open air, badly scorched and bruised.

The miners employed near by hurried to the spot and attempted to put out the fire, but learning that six kegs of powder were stored in the shaft house, retreated in time to avoid the effects of the explosion which soon took place. Hardly twenty minutes had passed since Bernger escaped, before the debris was cleared away, and men were descending the shaft to rescue those who were known to be imprisoned below.

In the level were found the lifeless bodies of Pietro Fernandez, Eurica Tinazzi and Lorenzo Butzelli. They had evidently not realized that their only hope lay in making a desperate effort to ascend, and had been overcome in a few minutes by the smoke and the foul air generated by the draft of the fire overhead. Death quickly put an end to their sufferings, and their natural positions showed that asphyxiation is a speedy and almost painless end.

The bodies were brought to the surface eight hours after the accident, and an inquest was held by the authorities at Silver Plume.

or they have reached manhood, becoming virtually the manager or managers of the father's farm. A large number of the farmers of Ontario are men who have wrested their inheritance from the wilderness. Their powers of endurance in their earlier days were severely taxed, and while still far from aged, they are glad to seek all the relief they can obtain from actual labour. Nothing, therefore, is more natural and proper, especially where hired labour is scarce, than that the son or sons should work the farm, the father becoming, with advancing years, more or less dependent on their attentions to the family interest. Even marriage frequently does not break off the arrangement, the son with his children growing around him, being still, in effect, only a labourer, while the father holds the fee simple, and with it the vote.

It often happens, however, that the son becomes the bona fide lessee of the farm, the father still residing with him and voting as the owner, while the son enjoys the franchise as tenant, and where this state of things exists there is no difficulty or need for legislation. Both figure legally on the assessment roll; the assessment roll is the basis on which the voters' lists are framed, and both vote accordingly. But then it often occurs, where the political opinions of the family are of a pronounced stripe, or where the political organization of the district is active, that a system of granting bogus leases creeps in, merely to create voters. The result is that the least scrupulous often get the vote, while the most conscientious refuse to be a party to what is really a fraud, and are disfranchised. So it is said, "Better give all farmers' sons—working regularly on their fathers' farms—a vote, and let us have that done openly and above-board that 'is now done surreptitiously.' Then, too, it is argued that a farmer's son is, as a rule, even more intelligent than perhaps a score of small holders of property around him, and this also is frequently quite true. Why, then, do they vote, while he is excluded?

But then we begin to enquire under what plan or regulations shall the votes be secured to farmers' sons, or how shall we decide who are the persons entitled to the privilege? The first question that presents itself is:—What is a farm and who is a farmer? There were in 1871 in Ontario 172,258 occupiers of land, of which number 144,212 were owners, and 27,340 were tenants, and the proportions, added according to the extent of acreage occupied by each, were as follows:—

Over 200 acres.....	8,574
Over 100 to 200 acres.....	33,984
Over 50 to 100 ".....	71,864
Over 10 to 50 ".....	38,882
Ten acres and under.....	19,954

Total.....172,258

Now, is everybody, whether he farms under the highest or lowest class, to be, in the eye of the law, a farmer? Is everybody, in fact, who has a piece of land from one acre upwards in extent to be a farmer, and are his sons, if they happen to live at home, to vote as "farmers' sons"? We know well enough what in a popular sense is meant by a farmer, or a farmer's son, but when we come to reduce the idea to the strict and logical phraseology of the law the definition may be puzzling. You have got, therefore, to say: (1) what is a farm; (2) who is a farmer; and (3), what is to be the nature, limit, or extent of the service or agreement that is to give the farmer's son a vote. Must there be continuous employment and if so, for how long? Must there be a bargain or agreement, or a fixed payment of money, as proof of the actual existence of the bargain?

And, that being decided, then comes the question, How is the vote to be registered? So long as we keep to the assessment roll we are reasonably safe, because there must be at all events a property valuation to give a tangible claim to the

say with a relative, or a neighbour, or anybody else? Then following the same line of argument, if the farmer's daughter, why not everybody's daughter—the female school teacher, the seamstress, or any woman not represented by the vote of her husband? There are some very illogical exemptions in our political system besides those represented by church property or official salaries. And if the first step is taken towards putting everything on a beautifully logical footing we really don't see how Mr. Mowat can stop short of the point to which our argument has conducted us.

THE GRAND TRUNK ENGINEERS.

THE TERM OF CAPITULATION.—AN INCIDENT OF THE STRIKE.

MONTREAL Jan. 7.—This afternoon the Grand Trunk locomotive engineers received copies of their agreements with the Company containing in detail the stipulation.

Mr. Wallis, Mechanical Superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, this morning received a deputation of engineers, consisting of Mr. Arthur, President of the Brotherhood, and a representative from each of the ten committees on the road. The interview is considered as having been satisfactory, Mr. Wallis having found Mr. Arthur and the men very reasonable in their views of the matter, and regret was expressed at the circumstances which had resulted from the strike. Matters of detail were fully discussed, and arrangements entered into upon the basis of the agreement of 1875, with one or two modifications, which it is expected will be the means of securing a good understanding between the Company and the men for years to come. The principal modifications of the agreement of 1875 is the reduction to two of the number of classes of engineers and firemen. Mr. Wallis has further arranged to have a meeting of all the mechanical foremen on the road for further arrangement of any grievances which the men may prefer.

Mr. Hickson was interviewed last night and stated, in reference to the remark made, that next time he wanted volunteers he would find it a difficult matter, that when the volunteers did come they were insufficient. It was not creditable to the Dominion or Municipal Government that it took from Saturday morning until Tuesday night to get a sufficient force to cope with a couple of rioters at Belleville.

Mr. Arthur, Grand Chief, with the Grievance Committee, had a long interview with Mr. Hickson yesterday afternoon. He stated to members of the press that his society is composed of 12,000 members. The agreement arrived at is that the term of 1875 be adhered to, and the fourth grade be abolished, all discharged men to be taken back, subject to 20 per cent reduction.

An incident of the strike comes from the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Railway, where an engine driver was threatened by two belligerents with pistols in their hands, and warned not to move his train at the peril of his life. On receiving the signal the driver let on the steam as quick as possible and the train moved off, and the strikers' friends slunk off without effecting their object. Some of the engine drivers who went up to take the place of men who had struck returned last night from the west. They are so disfigured by having been tramped upon that it was with difficulty their relatives recognized them.

The engine-driver who was carried off from the Montreal express train whilst halting at Prescott Junction has not yet turned up.

Nearly the whole of this has been acquired in a year, or after the Commodore attained the age of sixty. In enterprise, he has been able to put his son, Wm. H. THE CARTWRIGHT LOAN.

The Globe of the 9th., gives the following common sense remarks about the Cartwright Loan:—

The Canadian correspondent of the London Standard, following in the footsteps of the leading Opposition organ, does his best to cry down the credit of the Dominion for the sake of having a fling at the present Ministry in general and at the Finance Minister in particular. Adopting the calculations of the Mail, he insinuates that some one who had no right to make any such profit must have pocketed a very large commission, the inference being that Mr. Cartwright was either taken in by sharpers or was a party to a scheme for cheating the Dominion out of a considerable sum of money. No one has ever yet hinted at the latter, for even his bitterest enemies do not question either the Finance Minister's patriotism or his personal integrity. The contention is that he failed to do as well for the country as he might have done, and in the estimation of his critics it is the easiest thing in the world to prove that he could have made much better terms had he known how to go about it. One would suppose that those who speak so sapiently are thoroughly acquainted with the Stock Exchange, and that they were present watching its fluctuations at the very time when Mr. Cartwright was effecting his loan. It is not a little amusing to hear those who know nothing practically about its opera-the privilege? The first question that presents itself is:—What is a farm and who is a farmer? There were in 1871 in Ontario 172,258 occupiers of land, of which number 144,212 were owners, and 27,340 were tenants, and the proportions, divided according to the extent of acreage occupied by each, were as follows:—

Over 100 to 200 acres.....	33,984
Over 50 to 100 ".....	71,864
Over 10 to 50 ".....	38,882
Ten acres and under.....	19,954

Total.....172,258

Now, is everybody, whether he farms under the highest or lowest class, to be, in the eye of the law, a farmer? Is everybody, in fact, who has a piece of land from one acre upwards in extent to be a farmer, and are his sons, if they happen to live at home, to vote as "farmers' sons"? We know well enough what in a popular sense is meant by a farmer, or a farmer's son, but when we connect the idea to the strict and logical phraseology of the law the definition may be puzzling. You have got, therefore, to say: (1) what is a farm; (2) who is a farmer; and (3), what is to be the nature, limit, or extent of the service or agreement that is to give the farmer's son a vote. Must there continuous employment and if so, for how long? Must there be a bargain or agreement, or a fixed payment of money, as proof of the actual existence of the bargain?

And, that being decided, then comes the question, How is the vote to be registered? So long as we keep to the assessment roll we are reasonably safe, because there must be at all events a property valuation to give a tangible claim to the franchise. But the moment you leave the assessment roll and come to mere registration, you have to go behind every contract, arrangement, or agreement, express or implied, to see that the claim is a good and legal one. And the question is whether the present evil of bogus leases could not be multiplied tenfold by the fabrication of bogus claims. There may be some ingenious method by which this may be overcome, but it will need a good deal of ingenuity to overcome it. And the task of keeping the voters' lists pure and free from illicit entries is bad enough without multiplying the chances of unlawful entries.

Another question obtrudes itself. If the farmer's son is to have a vote, why not everybody's son? If the farmer's son is to be enfranchised—who remains for convenience under the family roof—why is the store-keeper's son, or the mechanic's son, or any other son, for that matter, who follows the same laudable and filial line of conduct to be disfranchised? And as every male person is the son of somebody, the real point to be decided is: What is there between giving a particular person a vote because he is a farmer's son and giving every male person a vote because he is the son of somebody not a farmer? In other words, What stands between this proposal and what is called—perhaps not very correctly but popularly—universal suffrage? We say not very correctly, because the term has never meant exactly what it expresses. The advocate of universal suffrage, so called, has excluded to begin with, one-half, and some think the most intelligent half, of the population; he has then excluded all male persons under a certain age arbitrarily determined he has excluded the criminal and insane, and usually exacted some residential qualifications as a test of actual citizenship. But, even within these limits, what is known as universal suffrage is not popular in Canada. Public opinion certainly prefers the comparatively attractive franchise of the United States. And that has been the view of the most liberal minds of the Mother Country. Mr. Bright for instance, never advocated what is called "manhood suffrage," although he has ever more earnestly championed popular rights. He has always opposed "franchise franchises" as merely colourable attempts to give manhood suffrage to those who did not dare to advocate it openly and honestly. And he has urged that the object to be attained is, not so much that every body should have a vote should made, that next time he wanted volunteers he would find it a difficult matter, that when the volunteers did come they were insufficient. It was not creditable to the Dominion or Municipal Government that it took from Saturday morning until Tuesday night to get a sufficient force to cope with a couple of rioters at Belleville.

COMMODORE VANDERBILT.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, popularly known as "Commodore" Vanderbilt, whose death occurred at New York the 6th at 11 a. m. was one of the best known of Americans in connection with the great public enterprises of this continent. He was nearly 83 years of age at the time of his death, having been born on the 27th of May, 1794, at Staten Island, New York, where his father—who as his name indicates, was descended from the old Dutch settlers—owned a farm and a large sailing boat, in which he used to ferry passengers and produce occasionally from the Island to the neighboring city of New York. Quick to learn, young Vanderbilt turned a somewhat scanty education to good account, and at the age of eighteen years became owner of a boat in which he succeeded the regular transport of passengers and goods between Staten Island and the main land. Always ambitious and determined to eclipse any rival in the business of the hour, at nineteen he owned the largest boat of the class in New York Harbour, while he had a share at least in time in two or three others, and was his partner in a schooner of considerable tonnage. At the age of 23 he had accumulated a capital of $9,000, and had attained the position of captain of a steamboat plying between New York and New Brunswick in New Jersey and Delaware. As his means increased so did his investments in steamboats. He became the owner of a number of vessels running in the Hudson and Sound, having also included the proprietorship of a hotel in his speculations. Watchful of opportunities, on the discovery of gold in California Vanderbilt started a fleet of steamers via Nicaragua, in competition with the Panama line.

At this time he had become a wealthy man, and notorious for the boldness of his undertakings. He built a magnificent steam yacht, the North Star, and in this vessel made the tour of the European sea ports with his family. In 1858 he turned his attention to the transatlantic navigation, and the Vanderbilt line between New York and Havre had a prosperous existence until the breaking out of the civil war, when it was of necessity discontinued. THE CARTWRIGHT LOAN.

The Globe of the 9th., gives the following common sense remarks about the Cartwright Loan:—

The Canadian correspondent of the London Standard, following in the footsteps of the leading Opposition organ, does his best to cry down the credit of the Dominion for the sake of having a sting at the present Ministry in general and at the Finance Minister in particular. Adopting the calculations of the Mail, he insinuates that some one who had no right to make any such profit must have pocketed a very large commission, the inference being that Mr. Cartwright was either taken in by sharpers or was a party to a scheme for cheating the Dominion out of a considerable sum of money. No one has ever yet hinted at the latter, for even his bitterest enemies do not question either the Finance Minister's patriotism or his personal integrity. The contention is that he failed to do as well for the country as he might have done, and in the estimation of his critics it is the easiest thing in the world to prove that he could have made much better terms had he known how to go about it. One would suppose that those who speak so sapiently are thoroughly acquainted with the Stock Exchange, and that they were present watching its fluctuations at the very time when Mr. Cartwright was effecting his loan. It is not a little amusing to hear those who know nothing practically about its operations, and who, in all probability, never saw for themselves any financial transaction carried through in connection with it, condemn as incompetent the Minister who has been more successful than any other in floating his loans, just because he did not adopt the method they think would have been best under the circumstances. It is quite safe to predict that when Parliament meets his method of floating the last loan will escape hostile criticism just as much as his former efforts have done. When the Standard's correspondent asserts that under the present regime "Canada's credit is not what it was," he speaks the truth, but in a sense quite different from the one intended. Never before did Canadian credit stand so high as it has done under the present Administration, and with the return of better times it will rise even higher. To have effected all his loans at the low rate of four per cent., and on favourable terms, is of itself no insignificant achievement. It means a permanent reduction in the interest payable on our public debt, and the beneficial effects of such a reduction will be felt, not for twenty-five or thirty years only, but as long as the credit of the country is so good as to enable its Finance Minister to renew on terms equally favourable.

THE FRANCHISE.

From the Globe.

The proposal to give votes to farmers' sons is not quite so simple a matter as some people imagine. It is not now suggested for the first time, but has, so far, been generally discussed with reference less to its practical than its theoretical bearings. A practice very generally prevails in this country—and it is a pleasant feature in our social life—of one son at least, and often more than one, when he

be some ingenious method by which it may be overcome, but it will need a good deal of ingenuity to overcome it. And the task of keeping the voters' lists pure and free from illicit entries is bad enough without multiplying the chances of unlawful entries.

Another question obtrudes itself. If the farmer's son is to have a vote, why not everybody's son? If the farmer's son is to be enfranchised—who remains for convenience under the family roof—why is the store-keeper's son, or the mechanic's son, or any other son, for that matter, who follows the same laudable and filial line of conduct to be disfranchised? And as every male person is the son of somebody, the real point to be decided is—What is there between giving a particular person a vote because he is a farmer's son and giving every male person a vote because he is the son of somebody not a farmer? In other words, What stands between this proposal and what is called—perhaps not very correctly but popularly—universal suffrage? We say not very correctly, because the term has never meant exactly what it expresses. The advocate of universal suffrage, so called, has excluded to begin with, one-half, and some think the most intelligent half, of the population; he has then excluded all male persons under a certain age arbitrarily determined he has excluded the criminal and insane, and usually exacted some residential qualifications as a test of actual citizenship. But, even within these limits, what is known as universal suffrage is not popular in Canada. Public opinion certainly prefers the comparatively attractive franchise of the United States. And that has been the view of the most liberal minds of the Mother Country. Mr. Bright for instance, never advocated what is called "manhood suffrage," although no man ever more earnestly championed popular rights. He has always opposed "fancy franchises" as merely colourable attempts to give manhood suffrage to those who did not dare to advocate it openly and honestly. Yet he has urged that the object to be attained is not so much that every body should have a vote should be within the reach, with little effort, of all and that no class or body of the people should be, by reason of their being unable to reach the vote deprived of it. The "longer franchise" in the Reform Bill of 1867 was really a step towards universal suffrage although it had the justification that large numbers of artisans were forced by their avocation to live in cities where only "a flat or part of a house was within their means. Still, even with the rental was a test of qualification. The income franchise, too, was no doubt, in the same direction. But that only implies a place on the assessment roll, and a direct contribution to the expenses of the Local Government. Neither the longer franchise nor the income franchise was, therefore, strictly analogous to the demand to concede the vote to a man because he is somebody's son.

Finally we shall be met with the question, and very appropriately too:—If somebody's son is to have a vote because he is somebody's son, how in the name of justice can the franchise be denied somebody's daughter? Let us go back to the point we started from—the farm home, instead. The daughters of the agriculturists of Ontario are often better educated than the sons; they have more of education, they read the newspaper as intelligently and frequently with more attention. They too, stay by the "old folks," often practicing great self-denial showing exemplary fidelity and working as hard in their departments of industry as their brothers. Can any body say why the farmer's daughter, who milks the cows, feeds the chickens, superintends the dairy and does the work in doors is to be denied the vote given to the farmer's son, who grows the horses, feeds the hog markets the grain and works in the field? And if the farmer's daughter who stays at home is to have a vote why not the farmer's daughter who goes out to service indicates, was descended from the old Dutch settlers—owned a farm and a large sailing boat, in which he used to ferry passengers and produce occasionally from the Island to the neighboring city of New York. Quick to learn, young Vanderbilt turned a somewhat scanty education to good account, and at the age of eighteen, was himself owner of a boat in which he commenced the regular transport of passengers and goods between Staten Island and the main land. Always ambitious and determined to eclipse any rival in the business of the hour, at nineteen he owned the largest boat of the class in the harbour, while he had a share at that time in two or three others, and was a partner in a schooner of considerable tonnage. At the age of 23 he had accumulated a capital of $9,000, and had attained the position of captain of a steamboat plying between New York and New Brunswick in New Jersey, and elsewhere. As his means increased so did his investments in steamboats. He became the owner of a number of vessels running in the Hudson and Sound, having also included the proprietorship of a hotel in his speculations. Watchful of opportunities, on the discovery of gold in California Vanderbilt started a fleet of steamers via Nicaragua, in competition with the Panama line.

At this time he had become a wealthy man, and notorious for the boldness of his undertakings. He built a magnificent steam yacht, the North Star, and in this vessel made the tour of the European sea ports with his family. In 1858 he turned his attention to the transatlantic navigation, and the Vanderbilt line between New York and Havre had a prosperous existence until the breaking out of the civil war, when it was of necessity discontinued. One of the finest of the fleet, the Vanderbilt, was presented by the Commodore to the United States Government as an addition to their navy. It is, however, in connection with the railway system of the continent that the name of Vanderbilt has, for some years past, been most prominently identified. On the sale of his ships he applied his money almost exclusively to the purchase of an interest in railways. His first investment of any magnitude was made in Harlem Railway stocks, that line being at the time engaged in a warm struggle with the Hudson River Railway. The public were soon surprised to learn that the fares of the two rival roads were equalized, that competition was at an end, and that the same influence controlled both lines. At first a nominee of the Commodore was appointed president of the Hudson River Railway, but before long he was set aside, and Vanderbilt was the recognized president of both roads. This position brought him into connection with the New York Central. But he diplomatised before he attempted any aggressive action upon the management of the last named road. He contended himself with acquiring Central stock, and when, in 1864, an attempt was made to oust the then President, Corning, and change the directorate, Vanderbilt gave the threatened officials the support of half a million dollars worth of stock, and saved them from disaster. The grateful Directors made much of their powerful supporter, feted him on their annual trip over the road, and showed him all possible honor. But he heeded not their attentions. In 1867, at the annual meeting, only one vote was cast—that of Cornelius Vanderbilt. It represented thirteen millions of stock owned or temporarily held by the "Commodore," who was thenceforth President of the New York Central, with a potential influence in all its connections. The Lake Shore and the Canada Southern fell in turn into his hands, and at his death he had virtually the command of an unbroken line of route from New York to Chicago and St. Louis. An American paper gives the following as an estimate of his railway property:—

If the first step is taken towards putting everything on a beautifully logical footing, really don't see how Mr. Mowat can be short of the point to which our argument has conducted us.

THE GRAND TRUNK ENGINEERS.

THE TERM OF CAPITULATION.—AN INCIDENT OF THE STRIKE.

MONTREAL, Jan. 7.—This afternoon the Grand Trunk locomotive engineers received copies of their agreements with a Company containing in detail the stipulations.

Mr. Wallis, Mechanical Superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, this morning received a deputation of engineers, consisting of Mr. Arthur, President of the Brotherhood, and a representative from each of the ten committees on the road. The interview is considered having been satisfactory. Mr. Wallis having found Mr. Arthur and the men very reasonable in their views of the matter, and regret was expressed at the circumstances which had resulted from the strike. Matters of detail were fully discussed, and arrangements entered into on the basis of the agreement of 1875, in one or two modifications, which it is expected will be the means of securing a good understanding between the Company and the men for years to come. The principal modifications of the agreement of 1875 is the reduction to two of the number of classes of engineers and firemen. Mr. Wallis has further arranged to have a meeting of all the mechanical men on the road for further arrangement of any grievances which the men may prefer.

Mr. Hickson was interviewed last night and stated, in reference to the remark made, that next time he wanted volunteers he would find it a difficult matter, at which the volunteers did come they are insufficient. It was not creditable the Dominion or Municipal Government that it took from Saturday morning till Tuesday night to get a sufficient force to cope with a couple of rioters at Belleville.

Mr. Arthur, Grand Chief, with the grievance Committee, had a long interview with Mr. Hickson yesterday afternoon. He stated to members of the press that his society is composed of 12,000 members. The agreement arrived is that the term of 1875 be adhered to, and the fourth grade be abolished, all disgraced men to be taken back, subject to percent reduction.

An incident of the strike comes from the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Railway, where an engine driver was retained by two belligerents with pistols in their hands, and warned not to move the train at the peril of his life. On receiving the signal the driver let on the train as quick as possible and the train moved off, and the strikers' friends slunk without effecting their object. Some of the engine drivers who went up to take the place of men who had struck returned last night from the west. They were so disgusted by having been tramped on that it was with difficulty their activities recognized them.

The engine-driver who was carried off in the Montreal express train whilst lying at Prescott Junction has not yet returned up.

New York & New Haven	500,000	1 15

Ohio & Mississippi	1,000,000	80

Total	$45,000,000

Nearly the whole of this vast amount has been acquired in about twenty years, or after the Commodore had attained the age of sixty. In his railroad enterprise, he has been ably assisted by his son, Wm. H. Vanderbilt, also reputed to be a millionaire, and to whose business capability the old gentleman is said to have borne testimony in the pithy observation: "Billy can take care of himself." Unlike many bold speculators, Commodore Vanderbilt was thrifty and economical in the management of the great enterprises under his control. The splendid four-track road with which his name is most closely identified—the New York Central—is a standing monument of administrative genius. Nor did he affect the habits of a miser, his establishment, equipage, and general style of living being quite in keeping with a reputation for great wealth. He was fond of horses, was a patron of the turf, and liked the game of whist—in which he excelled. But he lived really only to accumulate money. He was grasping, avaricious, intolerant of any one who stood in his path; treated a rival or an opponent without mercy, and in his own sphere brooked no equal. Length of years favored his purpose. Had he died, as so many busy, restless men die, at fifty to sixty, he would have been hardly noticeable as one of the world's successful adventurers. But age only seemed to add to the eagerness with which he applied himself to work of accumulation. No one could match him in a bargain: "Whatever you get the old man will get more," was the remark of one who knew Vanderbilt well to a gentleman who came to negotiate a sale of railway bonds to the Commodore. It was his ambition to over-reach everybody, the love of power being intimately associated with the active spirit of acquisitiveness. People are eager to know the contents of Vanderbilt's will. He had been twice married: first in very early life to a person of humble origin, by whom he had thirteen children, several of whom are still living—and within the last few years to the lady who survives him. Soon after his second marriage he gave a large sum to the Methodist Church (South) to construct a college at Nashville, in Tennessee, and his contributions altogether to that institution were not much less than a million of dollars. That is the only money he is known to have disposed of during his life in aid of any subject of a philanthropic character. He was possessed of commanding presence, and was even handsome, although the keenness of the features bespoke only too plainly the character of the man.—Globe

COMMEODORE VANDERBILT.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, popularly known
 "Commodore" Vanderbilt, whose
 uth occurred at New York the 6th 11 a. m., was one of the best known of mericans in connection with the great ible enterprises of this continent. He is nearly 53 years of age at the time of

A VALUABLE ALLY.

We are glad to learn THE EXPRESS is not likely to be alone in its efforts to stimulate mankind generally, and heads of families in particular to avail themselves of the advantages of life insurance, for the purpose of fortifying those who are dependent upon them against the pinchings of poverty and want. We have quoted several times from the Christian Union and the Christian at Work, and we have availed on selves of passages from Dr. Tichner's sermons. It affords us pleasure to present to our readers the following interesting excerpt from the Christian Guardian. It used to be an unflinching source of encouragement to President Lincoln, in the darkest days of the terrible civil war, to know that the churches of the country were on the side of the national cause. It must be equally encouraging to our friend Russell, in his benevolent work, to know that he has so many of the wise and the good as his co-
 laborers, and it must be highly gratifying to the Traveller's Life and Accident Insurance Company, of Hartford, to know that it shares so largely in the confidence of that class of the community whose good opinion is of the most value. The Guardian is one of the very best and most ably conducted papers in the country.
 We hail it therefore with pleasure as a co-laborer in so good a cause. We cordially wish our able contemporary the largest possible measure of success, not only in swelling its subscription list, but in promoting everything good and useful, not the least among which is life insurance.

The extract speaks for itself:

"A $10,000 CLAIM PAID.—There are

 than that of giving honor to whom honor

 a most fitting opportunity for the discharge of this duty, in awarding our meed
 of praise to the Traveller's Insurance

 cial statement presents unmistakable
 evidence of its soundness, and we cheerfully give place to the following indication of its ability and promptness in pay-

THE BEST STORIES,

Original and Selected; interesting Sketches,

 a Household Department, filled every week with practical information of a great value in every

... nearly 53 years of age at the time of his death, having been born on the 27th May, 1794, at Staten Island, New York, where his father—who as his name indicates, was descended from the old Dutch settlers—owned a farm and a large sailing boat, in which he used to carry passengers and produce occasionally from the Island to the neighboring city of New York. Quick to learn, young Vanderbilt acquired a somewhat scanty education in his own country, and at the age of eighteen, he himself owned a boat in which he succeeded the regular transport of passengers and goods between Staten Island and the mainland. Always ambitious and determined to eclipse any rival in the business of the hour, at nineteen he owned the largest boat of the island in the harbor, while he had shared at one time in two or three more, and was a partner in a schooner of considerable tonnage. At the age of 23 he had accumulated a capital of $9,000, and had obtained the position of captain of a steamboat plying between New York and New Brunswick in New Jersey, and elsewhere. At his means increased as did his investments in railroads. He became the owner of a number of vessels running on the Hudson Sound, having also included the proprietorship of a hotel in his speculations. Watchful of opportunities, on the discovery of gold in California Vanderbilt started a fleet of steamers via Nicaragua, in competition with the Panama Co.

By this time he had become a wealthy man, and notorious for the boldness of his undertakings. He built a magnificent steam yacht, the North Star, and in this vessel made the tour of the European ports with his family. In 1858 he turned his attention to the transatlantic navigation, and the Vanderbilt line between New York and Havre had a prosperous existence until the breaking out of the civil war, when it was of necessity discontinued. One of the finest of the fleet, the Vanderbilt, was presented by the Commodore to the United States Government as an addition to their navy. It is, however, in connection with the railway system of the continent that the name of Vanderbilt has, for some years past, been most prominently identified. The sale of his ships he applied his money almost exclusively to the purchase of an interest in railways. His first investment of any magnitude was made in Harlem Railway stocks, that line being at the time engaged in a warfare with the Hudson River Railway. The public were soon surprised to learn that the fares of the two rival roads were equalized, that competition was at an end, and that the same influence controlled both lines. At first a nominee of the Commodore was appointed president of the Hudson River Railway, but before long he was set aside, and Vanderbilt was recognized president of both roads. His position brought him into connection with the New York Central. But he demurred before he attempted any aggressive action upon the management of the last named road. He contended his last with acquiring Central stock, and in, in 1864, an attempt was made to oust the then President, Corning, and to place the directorate, Vanderbilt gave threatened officials the support of a million dollars worth of stock, and saved them from disaster. The great Directors made much of their powerful supporter, feted him on their annual trips over the road, and showed him all possible honor. But he heeded not their enticements. In 1867, at the annual meeting, only one vote was cast—that of Melius Vanderbilt. It represented fifteen millions of stock owned or temporarily held by the "Commodore," who is thenceforth President of the New York Central, with a potential influence over all its connections. The Lake Shore and the Canada Southern fell in turn in his hands, and, at his death he had fully the command of an unbroken route from New York to Chicago to St. Louis. An American paper says the following as an estimate of his life property:—

It is stated that the late contest of the Dunkinities fifty dollars, and the Anti-Dunkinities over four hundred.

A VALUABLE ALLY.

We are glad to learn THE EXPRESS is not likely to be alone in its efforts to stimulate mankind generally, and heads of families in particular, to avail themselves of the advantages of life insurance, for the purpose of fortifying those who are dependent upon them against the pinches of poverty and want. We have quoted several times from the Christian Union and the Christian at Work, and we have availed ourselves of passages from Dr. Taberner's sermons. It affords us pleasure to present to our readers the following interesting excerpt from the Christian Guardian. It used to be an unfailing source of encouragement to President Lincoln, in the darkest days of the terrible civil war, to know that the churches of the country were on the side of the national cause. It must be equally encouraging to our friend Russell, in his benevolent work, to know that he has so many of the wise and the good as his co-laborers, and it must be highly gratifying to the Traveller's Life and Accident Insurance Company, of Hartford, to know that it shares so largely in the confidence of that class of the community whose good opinion is of the most value. The Guardian is one of the very best and most ably conducted papers in the country, we hail it therefore with pleasure as a co-laborer in so good a cause. We cordially wish our able contemporary the largest possible measure of success, not only in swelling its subscription list, but in promoting everything good and useful, not the least among which is life insurance. The extract speaks for itself:

"A $10,000 CLAIM PAID.—There are few duties more pleasing to the journalist than that of giving honor to whom honor is due; and certainly the present affords a most fitting opportunity for the discharge of this duty, in awarding our meed of praise to the Traveller's Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn. Its financial statement presents unmistakable evidence of its soundness, and we cheerfully give place to the following indication of its ability and promptness in paying claims."

THE LONDON, 20th Nov., 1876.

DEAR SIR.—I acknowledge the prompt and satisfactory payment of two policies—one a Life Policy of the late George Reed, Jr., who was accidentally drowned in the Toronto Bay on the 25th August last, for $6,000 and one, an Accident Policy, of the same life, for $4,000. I have pleasure in saying that the claims were adjusted in a reasonable way, without any necessary objections or obstructive demands. I am also indebted to you for the facilities afforded to bring about an immediate settlement of the claims I had to make as executor of deceased's will.

Yours truly, JAMES BEATTY, JR.

NAPANEE, Dec. 5th, 1876.

We notice that the extensive lumbering business of Baker, Jones & Co., is to be offered for sale on the 12th of March, in Belleville, comprising two large steam mills on the Bay of Quinte, over 150 square miles of timber limits on the Trent and Moira rivers, and nearly 12,000,000 feet of lumber of all kinds besides wharves, tools, and every appliance for carrying on an extensive lumbering business.

Mr. Grand Trunk Hickson's head is perfectly level on some points, he has issued a circular enjoining caution upon all employees, who, presuming upon their long acquaintance with the business become so habitually careless, when duty calls them to places of danger, that they risk their lives and limbs in the most foolish manner. Suspended.

We regret to hear that the firm of Gray Rennie & Co. of Toronto, has suspended. Mr. Rennie was an old Napanee boy, and carried on a very successful Dry Goods and general store in this place, until he removed to Toronto, where for a number of years he has been a member of the above mentioned firm, engaged in a large and extensive business.

Laying the Gas Pipes.

Our Gas Company seems determined to satisfy all intending customers. On Tuesday last a gang of six able-bodied men, under the supervision of Engineer Jack Stevens, and Chief Inspector Douglass, were engaged in laying a gas pipe across Main Street, opposite Parker's Hardware Store. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the work progressed, favorably aided by a large bonfire of pitch, tar, and turpentine, serving the double purpose of thawing the ground and warming the crowd of idlers, who enjoyed it with evident satisfaction.

The Little Ones.

We call the attention of our School Board to the following:—Superintendent Kiddle, of New York, recommends that the School Board adopt a rule to protect children from too long detention after school hours. He says that it is often the practice to inflict an excessive punishment of this kind,—the time of detention sometimes exceeding two hours, and this chiefly in the case of many young children attending the primary schools.

Indian Concert.

A Troupe of the best Indian singers the Dominion can produce is on its way eastward through Ontario. This troupe is under the management of Mr. Kewetahghezheh (Mr. Crowe) a celebrated Indian singer. The music consists of secular songs, sacred songs and solos, recently used by Moodie and Saukey at their wonderful revivals in Great Britain. A drawing knife and chisel are missing from the wood shop which were used by the miscreants in their work of destruction. Mr. David Foote who has been on trial as the suspected party, has been held in $400, bail till next Monday.

Strayed or Stolen.

Our Chief has lost his staff of life, we mean the big stick he carries when on duty, which some rascal has appropriated in the most barefaced manner. We will describe this unique implement of modern warfare. It had at the bottom a large and sharp pointed piece of cast steel, suitable for harpooning a man-eating shark, at the other end a high protuberance, the gentlest tap from which would bring the most desperate law-breaker to his senses; in fact it was a cross between a Peepi war club and the mast of a ten ton yacht. Barnum having been notified, other curiosity-hunters are cautioned against negotiating for the same.

On His Muscle.

A young man being slightly irritated with "Old Rye" on Saturday last, had a strong argument with the Market Clerk about a matter of five cents, his tongue getting too loose for that official's nerves, four of the town protectors were invited to join in. Bill now struck out in a manner worthy of the celebrated Jack Heenan, scattering his opponents like chaff before the wind, after a desperate encounter with Jimmy, Jerry, Billy, and a few outsiders, he was placed on a sleigh and under the continued weight of his captors, who sat upon his corporeity, driven at a furious pace down Main Street to the Police Court, followed by a motley crowd. Judge James persuaded him to deposit $5 for Her Majesty's benefit and the necessary costs which he forked over forthwith.

Our heroine made a dive for the speaker, the blonde Em interfered, and then followed a hand-to-hand conflict, during which the lights were extinguished and the combatants despoiled of their back hair, sleeve buttons &c., rolled over and over. The alarmed neighbors appearing on the scene put a stop to the sanguinary conflict, the Belleville lass was forced to beat a retreat, minus her jewelry, boots, head-gear and numerous outside article of clothing, in this sorry plight she made her way over the draw-bridge and out Centre street to a less aristocratic abode.

Railroad Abuses.

The following aptly applies to our Grand Trunk management:—The New York Graphic justly observes:—Evidently, if life on railroads is to be made tolerably safe, statute law must still further restrain the natural cupidity from which disasters mainly result. In this State, recently, a brakeman went to sleep and a fatal collision occurred, and being called as a witness at the inquest, the man said he had been on duty twenty-three hours at the time of the accident, and could keep awake no longer. He had not taken off his clothes for seven days, and was completely prostrated with fatigue. This is one case of thousands. When hard times come, and dividends diminish, the cry goes up from stockholders, "Economise! reduce expenses! and, as a fashionable woman in a similar emergency sometimes cuts off the perquisites of her washerwoman instead of reducing her own wardrobe, so the officers of these immense corporations, instead of cutting down their own salaries or abolishing sinecures, put the poor brakeman or switchman on half pay or double work. In England, laws have been passed to prohibit railroads and other corporations from thus injuring themselves and imperilling life, and we shall have to adopt similar measures.

New York, Jan. 6.—A thousand dollars worth of gold pens and stamper were stolen from William Waggoner's store, Greenwich street, yesterday.

New York, Jan. 6.—Colts Morris, whose strange actions have been recorded, is a defaulter to the amount of half a million dollars. The family estate has made restitution of $350,000. Insanity was signed.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Jan. 4.—Oscar Hudson, a mulatto, poured boiling water over Martha Shuttle's mistress, and threw her upon the stove, burning her fatally, yesterday. Jealousy!

It is reported that $12,000 belonging to the Illinois National Bank, of Chicago, recently stolen from the Treasury, has been restored, the thief fearing detection.

There appears to be a prospect of the speedy termination of the Indian war in the West, Spotted Tail having undertaken to bring Crazy Horse into Red Cloud Agency. The success of this project would virtually put an end to the conflict.

THE LATE COMMODORE VANDERBILT.—Few persons visited the dead Commodore's house on Saturday 6th, except immediate friends and relatives. It is not definitely settled whether there will be any pall-bearers.

Maine is a moral State. Only one indictment found all last year in that State for any capital offence. The Maine Liquor law is no longer supreme there however.

A writer estimates the corn crop of Illinois this year at 600,000,000 bushels, and the total crop of the whole country at 4,000,000,000. At fifty cents per bushel the crop would amount to two billion dollars—enough to pay the national debt.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—The World says. Intimate friends of James Gordon Bennett consider it unquestionable that Fredrick May, his prospective brother-in-law and by who he was recently cowed, has received an invitation to a hostile meeting, probably in Canada.

The President of the United States Senate suggests two methods of counting the electoral vote, viz: either to count what he believes to be the rightful vote, and submit the result for the action of the joint Convention; or to count only the undisputed votes, and submit the balance to the Convention.

SLEIGHING CARIVAL.—WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 6.—A great masquerade sleighing carnival took place this afternoon on Pennsylvania-avenue, that thoroughfare being alive with sleighs of every description, and occupants grotesquely attired and masked. The sidewalks were lined with thousands of people.

SNOW BLOCKADE.—In New York City 6th. The snow blockade continues, and trucking is almost impossible. It is estimated that the loss of the city business by the blockade this week will reach one million, and if a remedy is not provided business must in a measure be suspended.

THE HUDSON ICE-HARVESTERS.—MONTROIT, N. Y., Jan. 5.—The most of the large ice companies have resolved to defer cutting ice here until Monday. A despatch from Catskill says the stike was resumed there with increased vigour this morning, from four to five hundred men parading the streets with clubs in defiance of the orders of the authorities.

PERSONAL ACCIDENTS.

A MAN KILLED BY A FALL FROM A SCAY-FOLD, IN THE OPERA HOUSE BELLEVILLE.

About 10.30 on the 4th, an accident occurred in the Opera House, which resulted in the death of John C. Winnberg, the architect.

It appears that deceased, in company with a carpenter named Israel Bashaw, was engaged in taking down some of the scaffolding which had been erected within the building. Bashaw was in the act of sawing a plank which was fastened to one of the uprights, in order to take down a portion of the staging, when the latter gave way, allowing Winnberg to fall between the planks which had become detached. The unfortunate man fell a distance of about thirty feet, and struck on his head. When picked up he was found to be dead. When the body was laid on the floor of the parquette, blood gushed forth in a stream from the mouth and nostrils of the deceased. Bashaw, who was in company with Winnberg, had a very narrow escape from falling. As soon as the planking began to give way, he endeavored to catch, and succeeded in reaching, a projecting plank, and by a great effort climbed over the scaffolding. His escape was a very narrow one. Mr. George Bull and Fred Richardson were standing on another platform a little higher up, and about ten feet distant from where Winnberg and Bashaw were working. Mrs Winnberg was in the building shortly after the accident, and her cries were pitiful to hear. Deceased was a Sæde by birth, and was about 40 years of age. He came to this place from Chicago, and this was the first work he had been engaged in here. He was a first-class mechanic, as his work attests, and was much esteemed for his quiet and unostentatious manner. He leaves a widow and four children to mourn his loss. Drs. Lister and Wilson were early in attendance; but their presence was unnecessary, as nothing could be done. No inquest was held, the attending physicians deeming it unnecessary. The skull was fractured in a horrible manner, and was frightfully crushed. The family have the sympathy of the entire community in their affliction.—From the Ontario of the 4th.

ELOPEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

A MARRIED TEACHER EL-PES WITH A GIRL OF EIGHTEEN.

The Orillia Times, of last week says.—On Tuesday afternoon a gentleman came into our office to enquire the whereabouts of Mr. Bristow, who had been engaged as head Master of the Orillia High School. He learned with the greatest surprise and disappointment that Mr. Bristow had resigned the position to which he had so recently been appointed. On learning that his resignation was sent from Detroit, the gentleman fairly broke down, and it was some time before he could explain the cause of his apparent grief. His history was a pitiable one. Mr. Bristow had been a frequent visitor at his house in Campbellford, and had succeeded in gaining the affections of Mr. Shaw's only daughter, a girl of eighteen. The affection was developed in spite of the fact that Mr. Bristow was a married man. About a fortnight ago he sent his wife, to whom he has been married only about a year and a half, away to Montreal to spend the holidays along with his friends. Miss Shaw accompanied her as far as Belleville where she was to visit some of her own friends. Instead of doing so, however, she went to Cobourg, where she waited until joined by Bristow, who did not leave Campbellford until Tuesday of last week. Mr. Shaw's suspicions were not aroused until the following Saturday, and on making enquiries at the place she was supposed to visit go trace of her could be obtained. He came on to Orillia hoping to find them there, and a member of the Campbellford mates for her little form and pleasing disposition carried cheerfulness into their ranks. Diligent punctual and exemplary obedient and graceful at home she won the hearts of all. But alas we are sorrowed. Those rosy cheeks and ruddy lips are blanched by Consumption. The voice once so exhilarating in laugh and song is feeble husky and supplanted by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch gently and take her hand. Do not shudder because of the feeble and passionless grasp. The hand once so hearty and plump is emaciated and shows bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins are plainly mapped upon the surface. The pulse that bounded with repletion, carrying vigor to the whole system and imparting life beauty vivacity health and strength, is delicate to the touch. The feeble heart cannot propel the thin, scanty blood with force. Must we lose her while yet in her teens? Companions and friends gather around with words of cheer and consolation, and depart with moistened eyes and silent steps. Must we lose her? No! there is relief! We can stay this destroyer of our happiness and not suffer the loss of so bright a gem. Something more is required now than dietary and hygienic observance for nature calls for aid and she shall have it. Take this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. How it allays the irritable cough improves the appetite and digestion and sends a healthy tinge through the frame. The blood is enriched nervous force increased and the heart bounds with a new impulse. See her face bright, by degrees; the colour is returning her voice falters yet but is gaining. Let us take her out in the warm sunshine in a short time she will be able to go without our aid, a cheerful girl. This delightful medicine must be God-bless. It is restoring health to our loved one. She is emerging from her sickness sweeter and nobler than before and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery must have the credit. It has raised her.

S. R. EGAR, druggist, of West Union, O., says that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a wonderful cure of Consumption in that neighborhood.

LOSS OF APPELITE IN HORSES.—Horses lose their appetite from various causes, but most frequently by the approach of some disease, this circumstance ought not to be overlooked by those who own horses, but should be immediately attended to as by so doing the disease may be checked, and the life of the horse saved. To do which we are positive there is nothing equal to 'Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy,' it purifies the blood, corrects all derangements of the digestive organs, and as a necessary consequence the appetite is restored, the skin becomes soft, and the coat assumes a soft and shining appearance. Remember name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northop & Lyman, Toronto, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

HOW RAIL ROAD ACCIDENTS ARE CAUSED.—Buffalo, Dec. 25.—Frank McGraw, the Central Railroad brakeman, through whose neglect an accident occurred which resulted in the death of Benj. F. Woolworth, express messenger, has been arrested on a charge of manslaughter. McGraw was sent back to flag a train and was left in the bitter cold for more than three hours. Unable to longer endure it, and his arms being already paralyzed, he sought shelter in a caboose on a side track, and while there the train which he had been instructed to flag passed him without the signal being observed. McGraw showed the jury that he had not been in bed for one week previous, and for two days had not tasted food, being detained on the road by accidents.

When informed of his letter to the Board here, dated Detroit, and tendering his resignation, Mr. Shaw's worst fears were confirmed—the faithless husband had eloped with his daughter. The parents of the unfortunate girl did not suspect the existence of any improper attachment between them, the intimacy being the less suspicious on account of certain domestic arrangements. Mr. Shaw left Orillia the following morning for Detroit, hoping to find the guilty lovers and to save his daughter from further degradation.

IRON BRIDGES.

A Civil Engineer of some eminence, writes an interesting letter to the New York Herald on the subject of iron bridges for railways, as his contribution to the discussion aroused by the Ashmole disaster. Accidents to bridges, he says are of two classes. In one case the train leaves the rails and dashes violently against the bridge and destroys it; in the other the bridge "lies down" under the dead weight of the train without any shock or blow upon it. The former are, when unpreventable, as they frequently are, real accidents; the latter are not, because if the bridge is properly constructed such a catastrophe cannot happen. Proper construction implies good design, good material, and good workmanship, and if these are all present an iron bridge may be regarded as no less safe than a stone one. The effect of age and cold on the iron are then discussed, the conclusion being that if the structure be subjected to no more than the proper strain it will last indefinitely, but that if the strains are much increased it would lose its strength. The effect of severe cold on common wrought or cast iron is to make it more

THOMAS'S ELECTRIC OIL

Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Thomas's Electric Oil, purely a preparation of six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportions of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made,

of the Ontario Gazette contains the Proclamation extending the limits of the Town of Picton and dividing it into four Wards, which, on and after the 7th of January, 1877, will be known as follows;
No. 1, Hallowell Ward; No. 2, Brock
Ward; 3, Quinte Ward; No 4, Tecumseath Ward.

Mr. Arthurs, Grand Chief, with the Grievance Committee, had a long interview with Mr. Hickson, on the 5th, and stated to members of the Press that his Society is composed of 1200 members.
The agreement arrived at is that the terms of 1875 be adhered to; that the fourth grade be abolished; and that all discharged men be taken back subject to 20 per cent. reduction.

MONTREAL, Jan. 5.—President Arthur
of the Brotherhood and a Grievance Committee of ten engine drivers had a long interview with Mr. Hickson to-day, resulting in a permanent reconciliation between the Company and the men. Tomorrow Mr. Wallis, the Locomotive Superintendent, will issue officials copies of the agreement to each member of the Committee for him to convey to the men in his district. The terms are that the agreement of 1875 shall be faithfully adhered to. All drivers are to be taken on,

ATTEMPT TO BURN A TOWN.—Charleston, S. C., January 5.—The town of Darlington was fired simultaneously in in three places this morning. The office of the Darlington Southerner and another building were destroyed, but the exertions of the people saved the town. This makes the fourth attempt to burn the town of Darlington since the election.

diary threats. The agents of the Ice Companies have called on the Sheriff for a posse of 200 men to guard each ice house at Catskill Athens, and Cox-sackle.

Commodore Vanderbilt's body will lay in state for an hour on Sunday morning in the main hallway of his house. A large body of New York Central employees will view the remains and escort
them to church. The general public will not be allowed to view the remains.
A post mortem examination will be held to-morrow, as the doctors and several members of the family favour it. Rev.
Drs. Deans and Hulton will perform the burial service, and Dr. Deans will deliver the address. The cortege will start for Staten Island via the Battery at the conclusion of the services. One hundred carriages have been ordered by the family for friends attending.

HOW RAIL ROAD ACCIDENTS ARE CAU-SED.—Buffalo, Dec. 25.—Frank McGraw,
the Central Railroad brakeman, through whose neglect an accident occurred which resulted in the death of Benj. F. Woolworth, express messenger, has been arrested on a charge of manslaughter. McGraw was sent back to flag a train and was left in the bitter cold for more than three hours. Unable to longer endure it, and his arms being already paralyzed, he sought shelter in a caboose on a side track, and while there the train which he had been instructed to flag passed him
without the signal being observed.
McGraw showed the jury that he had not been in bed for one week previous,
and for two days had not tasted food, being detained on the road by accidents.
The feeling is in his favor and intensely bitter against the New York Central Road.

Everything seems to be in good shape
for a revival of trade and industry after the New Year, says the Boston Post.
The over-production and over-importations of past year have worked off; stocks
of goods in the interior are sold up closer than for many seasons past; popular economy has reduced popular consumption to the lowest possible point; the shrinkage in values has brought all kinds of property and merchandises down to hard pan; the cost of production, in all departments of skilled industry, is as low
as it can well be under any imaginable circumstance; money is easy and seeking employment at as low rates of interest as were current before the war. With these favourable conditions, all that is needed to restore confidence and set the machinery of trade and productive industry in motion, is for the political bummers and mercenaries to go to the rear and take the back seats which the popular verdict has assigned to them.

VANDERBILT'S FUNERAL.

LARGE CONCOURSE OF PEOPLE—MAGNI-FICENT SIMPLICITY.

New York, Jan. 7.—The funeral of Commodore Vanderbilt took place to-day.
The weather was extremely inclement,
notwithstanding which a large number of persons called at the house prior to the removal of his remains to the Church of the Stranger, where the funeral services were held. The remains which were encased in a metallic casket, were laid in the large hall, and viewed by friends,
visitors, and a deputation of 250 of the New York Central and H. R. R. The deceased was attired in a full dress suit,
plain silver shirt studs, and white neck-
tie. The floral offerings were of the most simple character, and all attempt at display was studiously avoided. A large crowd witnessed the removal of the remains from the house to the church,
which were carried by six pall-bearers;
150 police kept the streets clear.

The steamer "Caroline," which took a leap over the Niagara Falls in 1837, was built by the late Commodore Vanderbilt band had eloped with his daughter. The parents of the unfortunate girl did not suspect the existence of any improper attachment between them, the intimacy being the less suspicious on account of certain domestic arrangements. Mr.

Shaw left Orillia the following morning
for Detroit, hoping to find the guilty lovers and to save his daughter from further degradation.

IRON BRIDGES.

A Civil Engineer of some eminence,
writes an interesting letter to the New York Herald on the subject of iron bridges for railways, as his contribution to the discussion aroused by the Ash-tula disaster. Accidents to bridges, he says are of two classes. In one case the train leaves the rails and dashes violently against the bridge and destroys it: in the other the bridge "lies down" under the dead weight of the train without any shock or blow upon it. The former are,
when unpreventable, as they frequently
are, real accidents; the latter are not,
because if the bridge is properly constructed such a catastrophe cannot happen.
Proper construction implies good design,
good material, and good workmanship,
and if these are all present an iron bridge
may be regarded as no less safe than a stone one. The effect of age and cold on the iron are then discussed, the conclusion
being that if the structure be subjected to no more than the proper strain it will last indefinitely, but that if the strains are much increased it would lose its strength.
The effect of severe cold on common wrought or cast iron is to make it more brittle, while refined iron and Bessemer steel are less injuriously affected. The iron bridges of the Grand Trunk are instanced as those which furnish the longest experience. Of those there are some sixty or seventy which have been in constant use since 1855, and though they have been exposed to severe cold they are now in as good condition as when built. The writer is further of opinion that in many instances iron bridges are badly built,
and that many of them are no safer than
the unfortunate structure at Ashtula.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH A CORPSE.

The Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise says that some weeks since a young scoundrel
grace in that city, who had left his parental roof in New York under a cloud in 1865, concluded to "put up a job on the old gentleman and make a raise." He accordingly telegraphed to his father in New York:—

Mr. —: Your son Walter was killed in the Con. Virginia this morning by a falling cage. What shall we do with the remains? M. L. Baker.

Almost immediately a telegraphic reply came for $150 and the Income reply:—"Bury them." The fictitious M.
L. Baker seized the $150 and went on a royal spree, and a few weeks afterward
he wrote to his father over his real name
as follows:—

DEAR FATHER,—I have just learned that an infamous scoundrel named Baker
sent you a fictitious account of my death and swindled you out of $150. He also borrowed $85 from me and left the country. I write to inform you that I am yet alive, and long to see the old parental roof again. I am in somewhat reduced circumstances, the accumulation of the last five years having been lost—a disastrous stock speculation—and if you would spare me, $250 I will ever be thankful for your favor. Give my love to all. Your affectionate son.

WALTER.

A few days later the young man received the following:—
My DEAR SON,—I have buried you
once, and that's an end of it. I decline having any more transactions with a corpse. Your's in flesh. FATHER.

of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr.

THOMAS'S ELECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of
it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial
judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is Thomas, Electric Oil, purely a preparation of
six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain
fixed proportions of greater power and
producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or
in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change
takes place forming a compound which
could not by any possibility be made
from any combination or proportions of
the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made,
one which produces the most astonishing
results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile liquids consequently loses
nothing by evaporation. Where applied
you get the benefit of every drop; whereas
with other preparation nearly all the
alcohol is lost in that way, and you get
only the small quantity of Oils which
they may contain.

mates for her lithe form and pleasing disposition carried cheerfulness into their ranks. Diligent punctual and exemplary obedient and graceful at home she won the hearts of all. But alas we are sorrow-
ed. Those rosy cheeks and ruddy lips are blanched by Consumption. The voice once so exulting in laugh and song is feeble husky and supplanted by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch gently and take her hand. Do not shudder because of the feeble and passionless grasp. The hand once so hearty and plump is emaciated and shows bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins
are plainly mapped upon the surface.
The pulse that bounded with repletion,
carrying vigor to the whole system and imparting life beauty vivacity health and strength, is delicate to the touch. The feeble heart cannot propel the thin, scanty blood with force. Must we lose her while yet in her teens? Companions and friends gather around with words of cheer and consolation, and depart with moistened eyes and silent steps. Must we lose her? No! there is relief! We can stay this destroyer of our happiness
and not suffer the loss of so bright a gem.
Something more is required now than dietary and hygienic observance for nature calls for aid and she shall have it.
Take this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. How it allays the irritable cough improves the appetite and digestion and sends a healthy tinge through the frame. The blood is enriched nervous force increased and the heart bounds
with a new impulse. See her face bright-
by degrees; the colour is returning her voice falls yet but is gaining.
Let us take her out in the warm sunshine
In a short time she will be able to go without our aid, a cheerful girl. This delightful medicine must be God-bless. It is restoring health to our loved one. She is emerging from her sickness sweeter
and nobler than before and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery must have the credit. It has raised her.

S. R. EGLAR, druggist, of West Union,
O., says that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a wonderful cure
of Consumption in that neighborhood.

LOSS OF APPETITE IN HORSES.—Horses lose their appetite from various causes,
but most frequently by the approach of some disease, this circumstance ought not to be overlooked by those who own horses, but should be immediately attended to us by so doing the disease may be checked, and the life of the horse saved.
To do which we are positive there is nothing equal to 'Darley's Condition Powders' and Arabian Heave Remedy, it purifies the blood, corrects all derangements of the digestive organs, and as a necessary consequence the appetite is restored, the skin becomes soft, and the coat assumes a soft and shining appearance. Remember name, and see that

THOMAS'S ELECTRIC OIL
Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial judgment of the people for any great length of time. One of these is THOMAS'S ELECTRIC OIL, purely a preparation of six of the best Oils known, each one possessing virtues of its own. Scientific physicians know that medicines may be formed of several ingredients in certain fixed proportions of greater power and producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change takes place forming a compound which could not by any possibility be made from any combination or proportions of the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made, one which produces the most astonishing results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before discovered. It contains no alcohol or other volatile bodies consequently loses nothing by evaporation. Where applied you get the benefit of every drop; whereas with other preparation nearly all the alcohol is lost in that way, and you get only the small quantity of Oils which they may contain.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC. REVOLVING MILK SHELVES FOR A DIARY.

On a recent visit to Beacon Farm, we saw a new arrangement of shelves in the dairy, which has been drawn and engraved for the benefit of our readers. The whole affair is so well shown in the illustration that little description is needed. It consists of an eight-sided central shaft, provided with an iron pin at the bottom, which works in a socket in the floor beneath; the upper part is carried through the ventilator in the upper floor. Eight arms are mortised into the shaft to support the shelves, of which there are six. Strips are carried from the upper part of the shaft over the edge of the shelves, as a farther support to them. The shelves, which are about 15 inches apart, are made of lattice-work, thus furnishing ventilation to the bottoms of the pans. The lowest shaft is six feet in diameter, and about two feet above the floor. The whole frame work revolves upon the pin at the bottom, and is readily moved around as the pans of milk are placed upon the shelves. This arrangement makes a great economy of space. The pans are not shown upon the shelves, so that the structure may be seen, although at our visit every shelf was fully occupied. The side shelves seen in the engraving have been before described; they too are very economical of space. The whole of the shelves are well painted in pure white.—Agriculturist.

TO MEND A BROKEN TUG.

No one should go from home with a buggy or a wagon without a small coil of copper wire and a "multum in parvo" pocket-knife. This knife, as its name implies, has many things in a little space, and, amongst other useful things, has a contrivance for boring holes in leather straps. In case a strap or leather trace breaks, while one is on a journey, and at a distance from any house, he would be in an awkward "fix" if without any means of repairing damages. With the copper wire and an implement for boring some holes, repairs can be made in a very few minutes. The ends of the broken strap or tug may be laid over each other or spliced; a few holes bored and stitches of wire passed through in the way known amongst the ladies as "back stitching." The ends of the wire are twisted together, and the job will be finished almost as quickly as this may be read. If a buckle breaks, or the tongue of the buckle is drawn through, and made useless, the end of the strap may be turned back over the loop of the buckle, and the wire passed through the holes in the strap, and the ends fastened. If it is a chain that breaks, the next links may be brought together and wire wound around them in place of the broken link, which will make the chain serviceable until home is reached. In fact, the uses of a piece of wire are almost endless. Nothing holds a button upon one's clothes so securely as a piece of wire, and once put on in this manner there is never any call upon the woman of the house at inconvenient times for thread and needle to replace it. The wire will pierce the cloth without any help, and nothing more is needed than to pass it through each hole of the button and twist the ends to secure them, cutting them off close with the knife. There is scarcely any little thing that will be found of so great use about a farm, or a workshop, or in a mill, or even in a house, as a small stock of soft copper wire.

ENGLISH SPARROWS.

H. McIntyre, Alabama, asks what the English sparrow could do in ridding them of the "cotton caterpillar?" The sparrows are domestic birds and live around dwellings. They require houses, or if building a dense growth of ivy or a thicket afford convenient places, they will build their nests in these. They have about three broods a year, and as they feed their young on animal food, the number of insects they destroy is very great. So far, all is in their favor, but the old birds do not live entirely, if largely, upon insects, and the young, when fledged, also require other food, and they devour grain, seeds and small fruits, and in Europe do so much mischief that they are classed among the pests. They do not migrate, but remain all the year round, and when there is much snow they must be fed. In Europe they are caught in attacking and destroying the buds of fruit and other trees; this might be prevented by supplying them with food and water, and perhaps in your State they could find food every day in the year. European farmers, who regard them as a nuisance, strive to reduce their numbers by destroying their nests, and do not take into account the good they may do early in the season. Having both sides of the question in brief, you can judge if the balance is likely to be, in your case, in favor or against the introduction of the birds.—Agriculturist

IN THE HENNERY AT NIGHT.

A writer in Morris' Rural New Yorker says:—See that the fowls have, before dusk, a few handfuls of whole corn and a comfortable roost. If your fowls are to be kept in health, they must not be left all night with empty crops nor allowed to roost in exposed places. The plan of allowing a fowl the exquisite privilege of roosting on "a rickety beam and an empty crop" is anything but economical. Don't have the roosts one above the other or the birds will be continually fighting for the highest place. Before you go to bed take a look at the chickens. There is no better time to inspect them than when they are quiet on the perch. I make it a rule to go through my fowl house every night. I have been singularly fortunate in the health of my flock, and I ascribe it to this practice. Passing along the roost, which is low, you glance at each bird, and being accustomed to their faces it is wonderful to learn how soon you will detect the first symptoms of illness. The altered appearance of the bird from the evening before, strikes you almost instantly, and the trouble being taken at the start, you can at once remove the bird and stop the disease from spreading through the flock.

Half a pound of sweet and a half a pound of bitter almonds, blanched, and beaten in a mortar to paste, may be added if desired. In pounding the almonds you must pound only two or three at a time, and use rosewater to moisten them and assist in forming them into paste; put in a few drops at a time. Be very sure to sift some flour over all your fruits after they are prepared and ready to mix in the cake. I use prepared flour, and always sift it before I weigh it. I use the best and the largest raisins, as they are much the richest. You can substitute rosewater for brandy. This is a very rich and handsome cake. It takes eight hours to bake in a moderate oven, if baked in a large loaf.

ARCTIC DOGS.

No kind of life among dogs is comparable for hardships with the life of a dog in an Arctic sledge. His tent is scarcely the pretext of a shelter, and his natural coat is generally covered with a thick rime. The snow when it drifts completely covers him, though he constantly but vainly endeavors to shake it off. He draws his breath with difficulty; hanger gnaws at his bowels, and his wounded feet color the snow with his blood. Often, too, these poor animals, amid the great cold, must keep still; then they lift up their paws alternately to prevent frost-bite. — Austrian Arctic Voyage.

For the past ten years she has been supported at the expense of the township, and resided with Mr. James McEdward. The age mentioned may be doubted by some but she always maintained it to be correct.

The question whether women shall preach in Presbyterian churches has come before the Newark Presbytery in the shape of a church trial. The Rev. Isaac M. See, of the Wickliffe Street Church, permitted two ladies who had been there in attendance upon the Woman's National Temperance Convention to occupy his pulpit on Sunday, Oct. 29. Mr. See did not dispute the fact, but denied the violation of any Scriptural rule. At the opening of the trial on the 20th a motion to dismiss the complaint was voted down. After this decision the prosecutor proceeded with his argument. The charge is that the occupation of the pulpit by women is a violation of the Book of Discipline, chapter 5, section 5, and also of the rules laid down by the Apostle Paul in the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

A French officer who has served many years in Algeria writes an interesting account of a dying lion. Fangless, covered with mange, and blind, is the king of beasts, on approaching the close of his reign. When not lying mournfully prostrate and alone in some sheltered nook, or behind some friendly mound overgrown with shrubbery, he feebly skulks within a small circuit of his lair in quest of a morsel of prey, which in his decrepitude he rarely succeeds in obtaining. At this stage of his career, if his scent does not all-tail him, his sole resource for nutrition is an occasional nest of field mice. Inferior animals smell at him fearlessly, and paw him with insolence, for the forest monarch, dethroned by disease, is incapable of resistance. Often the rustic Arab comes upon his majesty in his utter helplessness, and ends his troubles with a blow of a club.

CATARRH

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Cat-
arrh Remedy.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. AMAND, P. Q. Sept. 12, 1876.
MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may
know something of the merits of your CON-STITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-
nine years old; had been out of health for about
five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-
ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual
dropping in the throat and down upon the
lungs, such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an
improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chop-
ping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.

A TRAMP.

BY CHAS. S. ALBERT.

Only a tramp. He came walking in
With a bundle of clothes and an odor of
gin;
Haggard and worn with rheumatic pain
And the bloom of roses upon his face.

On the waste paper basket he took a seat
And the table embellished 'he with his
feet;
He sat on genius without regret,
And it got all the pressing 'twill ever get

Down, still down, in the basket he went.
Till he sat on a pin that was slightly bent
Without delay he arose from his 'sit'
And talked profane hist'ry a little bit.

Then down the stairs went my impro-
vised friend,
With the toe of my boot on his gable end
Kindly I helped him four steps at a
bound,
Till he revolved out on solid ground.

He shook his fist at our sanctum door.
And made a few demonstrations more;
Then with his clothes and odor of gin
The tramp went off as he didn't come in

THE CAPTAIN'S SACRIFICE

There are heroic souls who snatch
their hard living from the perilous toil
of our Northern lakes. Rough and rude
perhaps, but not the less are they heroes
George Manly was such a man. He has begun life as the son of a lake skipper
working his way by manly independence
and straight forward honesty, until, a twenty-seven, he was master of his own
schooner, and had passed his old mother above want. His father died a year before he was ranked among the owners of lake craft, blessing the son who has
smoothed his way into the dark valley
Laboring for the sake of his parents, the
sailor had but little time to give to other
matters or to think of his own pleasure
He had his dreams (what young man has
not?) of a home of his own, and a loving woman to fill and make it bright. But he had closed his eyes to the thought
until, at twenty-six, men called him a cynic because he avoided women. He was no cynic when the cry of the need was heard, no cynic when those in the distance called on him to aid.

He was hurrying home one night
through the darkened streets of the city, having just extorted port from Chicago with a cargo of grain. It was a bitter night, and the cold rain drove in his face and chilled him to the bone. He wrapped his water-proof coat about him
and laughed at the storm. Suddenly he heard a cry, and turning, saw a woman
sink fainting to the pavement. It was an old woman, in the dress of the poor
er class, carrying a bundle. He lifted
her and carried her into a drug store
where she was received, while he stood
by waiting until she could speak.
"Where do you live?" he asked

"But you must leave your name, & My father is a sailor too, and will want to thank you."

"No need of that, miss. I only did any one with the heart of a man would have done. But he knows me well enough—Captain George Manly, of the schooner Flying Arrow."

"Indeed!" she said, with a bright smile. "I have heard him speak of you often, and after what I have seen tonight, I can well believe all his praise of you."

Poor George blushed to the very roots of his hair, and plunged into the crowd ordering the driver in sailor fashion, "heave ahead," and was driven rapidly home. Next day, while he was on the schooner, a boy came down with a note from Captain Archer, asking him to call up; and he was only too glad to avail himself of the invitation, though he would not acknowledge that he wished to see another glimpse of Mary Archer's beautiful face. He went in the evening, a Captain Archer, somewhat recovered from his indisposition, received him with the bluff welcome which only sailors can give, and made him feel at home at once. Then Mary came in, radiant in beauty and played melodies, mournful and gay with a feeling and expression which a young sailor never had dreamed of. He sat in a perfect maze, watching her white fingers threading in and among the keys of the piano-forte, evoking sweet music from the depths of the old instrument. He would have there for hours watching her and listening to the music, but Captain Archer would not have it. He liked to talk.

"Stop clawing that piano, Mary," said, laughing. "What do you mean? When my young friend Manly comes see me, do you think I do not want hear him talk? There, get a chair this side of the fire. I'm glad you got

MILES STORMS

A TRAMP.

BY CHAS. S. ALBERT.

Only a tramp. He came walking in
With a bundle of clothes and an odor of
gin;
Haggard and worn with rheumatic pain,
And the bloom of roses upon his face.

On the waste paper basket he took a seat,
And the table embellished he with his
feet;
He sat on genius without regret,
And it got all the pressing 'twill ever get.

Down, still down, in the basket he
went.
Till he sat on a pin that was slightly bent
Without delay he arose from his "sit"
And talked profane hist'ry a little bit.

Then down the stairs went my impro-
vised friend,
With the toe of my boot on his gable end;
Kindly I helped him four steps at a
bound,
Till he revolved out on solid ground.

He shook his fist at our sanctum door.
And made a few demonstrations more;
Then with his clothes and odor of gin
The tramp went off as he didn't come in.

THE CAPTAIN'S SACRIFICE.

There are heroic souls who snatch
their hard living from the perilous toils
of our Northern lakes. Rough and rude,
perhaps, but not the less are they heroes.
George Manly was such a man. He had begun life as the son of a lake skipper,
working his way by manly independence
and straight forward honesty, until, at
twenty-seven, he was master of his own
schooner, and had paced his old mother
above want. His father died a year before he was ranked among the owners of
lake craft, blessing the son who had
smoothed his way into the dark valley.
Laboring for the sake of his parents, the
sailor had but little time to give to other
matters or to think of his own pleasure.
He had his dreams (what young man has
not?) of a home of his own, and a loving
woman to fill and make it bright. But
he had closed his eyes to the thought
until, at twenty-six, men called him a cynic because he avoided women. He
was no cynic when the cry of the needy
was heard, no cynic when those in the
distance called on him to aid.

He was hurrying home one night
through the darkened streets of the city, having just entered port from Chicago with a cargo of grain. It was a bitter night, and the cold rain drove in
his face and chilled him to the bone. He
wrapped his water-proof coat about him
and laughed at the storm. Suddenly he
heard a cry, and turning, saw a woman
sink fainting to the pavement. It was an old woman, in the dress of the poorer class, carrying a bundle. He lifted
her and carried her into a drug store,
where she was received, while he stood
by waiting until she could speak.

"Where do you live?" he asked,

just as you did last night, George, to-late in the fall as it is, she coast is dangerous. Did you hear of any wrecks?"

"Ay, indeed; the upper lake coast is lined with them. Thunder Bay is full of them, and I saw a bark ashore off Nine-mile Point, but her crew had left her.
The Bermuda was in Port Dalhousie
when I left, with a broken foremast. She will be down to-morrow, I reckon."

"It is a terrible life you live," said
Myra, softly. She was sitting on a low stool, with her head upon her father's knee. "I used to fall asleep nights and when the wind rose, I would be awake
in a moment, thinking of dear papa."

"She's tender-hearted, is my little girl,"
said the captain, laying a caressing hand
upon her head—"mighty tender-hearted,
to be sure. I'm going to tell you a story about a man who sails these lakes; not an old man, yet in experience he is as old as the gayest among us. He used to sail a little sloop out of this port, and went a matter of forty miles up the coast for any load he could get. It wasn't much of a boat, you understand. He had two men besides himself, and one of them was in the cabin sick with the ague."

"Captain!" said George faintly.
"Well, what is it? Don't cross my
hawse in that matter, you young lubber.
Let me tell the story."

"I wish you wouldn't," said George.
"Nonsense. You can see how short handed this going up was, with only one man to man a pretty heavy sheet, for some one had to steer; and there came
up one of the biggest blows we had that
year—a squall, I ought to have said.
When it struck her she had everything
reefed snug, so it did no harm to the sloop,
but it washed the sailor before the mast
overboard. What do you think he did,
this young captain? Did he leave that struggling man to his fate, and sail on before the wind? Not a bit of it. He threw her up in the wind, fastened the
tiller, and ran down to bring the sick
man up in his arms, and brought him on
deck, propped him up against the helm,
and got out a little dingy the sloop carried
—not much bigger than a Panama hat—
and went after that man. What do you think of that young tar-jacket, eh? What are you blushing at, George Manly? You can't bear to hear good deeds spoken of,
can you?"

"He did it," said Myra, with a glowing face. "He must not deny it, for I won't believe it."

He passed a pleasant evening, and
after that found it very convenient to
drop into the captain's house during the winter evenings to play a game of chess
with him. And when the captain was not at home—and it was astonishing how
often that happened—he would stay to sing duets with Myra. George had a magnificent voice, and they sang well together. The winter wore away, and George had fitted out the Flying Arrow
for her upward trip, when Captain Archer
came down to the boat.

"You don't go out to night, George?"
he said.

"I think so. The wind turns at midnight, and I think I must take advantage of it."

THE TOMB OF AGAMEMNON.

Dr. Henry Schliemann, writing to the Times under date Mycenae November 28, continues the account of his great discoveries:—

"I continue the description of the jewels, &c., found with the five bodies in the fourth tomb. Among the most interesting objects of his sepulchre I reckon
the magnificently ornamented gold buttons. Twelve are in the form of a cross, and one of them is 2 1-5 inches large
and 8 inches long; three are somewhat smaller, and the remaining eight are of a still less size. Of splendidly ornamented round gold buttons were found in all 216,
two of which are two inches in diameter,
seven are of the size of a 5f. piece and 207 are still smaller. All these buttons, the lower part of which consists of a bone button in the form of our shirtbuttons, must have served on the clothes of the deceased, whereas all which show
below only a flat piece of bone or wood have evidently served to decorate the sheaths of swords, lances, &c., to which they had been soldered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found
in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords,
16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had blades played with gold and richly ornamented.
There were also found with the swords
five large handle-buttons, four of which
are of alabaster and one of wood; all of
them are ornamented with gold nails.
Further, two golden shoulder-belts
(telamones), which were worn on the
shoulder across the breast; both are 4 ft.
long and 1 3-5 in. broad. There were further found two large golden girdle
belts ornamented with circles and flowers;
one of them is composed of two pieces.
There was also found part of a similar
belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only 1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 1-5 in. broad. Further a splendidly ornamented large golden handle, probably of a sceptre. It terminates in a dragon's head, whose scales
seem to have been imitated by square
pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid
like mosaic. This is an object of marvellous beauty, of which Homer would have said thauma ideethia (a wonder to look upon). There were also found seven large and one small golden diadems—one
of the former is ornamented with golden
leaves. All of them show splendid ornaments of circles and spiral lines. Further
four golden ornaments of the knemides
(graves) almost in form of a bracelet; one
comb of bone in a large handle or casing
of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear
it; one enormous, most magnificently
ornamented, massive golden bracelet,
weighing 360 grammes. In the centre
of the ornamentation of this bracelet is
soldered a separate piece of gold, representing the sun with his rays. The size
of this bracelet is so enormous that the
persons who has worn it must have had gigantic arms. It may have been worn on the legs. Quiet in opposition to the size of the bracelets are two massive golden seal
golden seal rings, the opening of which is
so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only.
One of the seals represents two warriors

twenty-seven, he was master of his own
schooner, and had placed his old mother
above want. His father died a year before he was ranked among the owners of
lake craft, blessing the son who had
smoothed his way into the dark valley.
Laboring for the sake of his parents, the
sailor had but little time to give to other
matters or to think of his own pleasure.
He had his dreams (what young man has
not?) of a home of his own, and a loving
woman to fill and make it bright. But
he had closed his eyes to the thought
until, at twenty-six, men called him a cynic because he avoided women. He
was no cynic when the cry of the needy
was heard, no cynic when those in the
distance called on him to aid.

He was hurrying home one night
through the darkened streets of the
city, having just extorted port from Chicago with a cargo of grain. It was a bitter night, and the cold rain drove in
his face and chilled him to the bone. He
wrapped his water-proof coat about him
and laughed at the storm. Suddenly he
heard a cry, and turning, saw a woman
sink fainting to the pavement. It was an old woman, in the dress of the poorer class, carrying a bundle. He lifted
her and carried her into a drug store,
where she was received, while he stood
by waiting until she could speak.

"Where do you live?" he asked,
kindly.

"I was going to 150 Mount Street," she gasped, "to Captain Archer's. Let me go, good people. The captain is sick and needs me."

"You cannot walk."

"I will," replied the stout old creature.
"He needs me, and I was his nurse."

"I'll get a cab and take her up," said
Manly. "Make her wait."

So they retained her while he hurried out to get a cab, and when it came they drove through the night and storm to 150 Mount Street, and Manly ran up the steps, half carrying the old lady, who was still weak. His ring at the bell was answered, not by a servant, but by a young lady, who held a lamp aloft to see who were at the door. As she stood there, with a flood of yellow light falling about her, the young man thought he had never seen any thing so beautiful,
and, like Price Geraint, when he saw Eidit at her father's ruined home, he felt that this was

"The one maid for him."

Her fair hair was banded back in great braids from her high forehead, and her eyes shone with a happy light. A plain wrapper of some dark material was confined at the waist by a girdle clasped by a golden buckle, and he caught a glimpse of a little foot peeping out beneath. Seeing the startled look on her face, he hastened to explain.

"You must not be frightened, miss,"
he said. "This old lady was taken ill in the street, and I happened to be near,
so I brought her here, as she said she must come to 150 Mount Street."

"You are very kind," replied the girl,
in her sweet low voice. "My father was unwell, and sent for his old nurse, but he did not think she would come out upon such a night as this. Are you better now, aunty?"

"She calls me aunty, the darlin',"
said the old lady, "though I'm no more kind to her than you, blessin's on your handsome face! It's few young men would take the trouble for an old dame
like me."

"The gentleman must be very wet."

and two men besides myself, and one of them was in the bin sick with the ague."

"Captain!" said George faintly.

"Well, what is it? Don't cross my
hawsies in that matter, you young lubber.
Let me tell the story."

"I wish you wouldn't," said George.

"Nonsense. You can see how short handed this gungun was, with only one man to manage a pretty heavy sheet, for
some one had to steer; and there came
up one of the biggest blows we had that
year—a squall, I ought to have said.
When it struck her she had everything
reefed snug, so it did no harm to the sloop,
but it washed the sailor before the mast
overboard. What do you think he did.
This young captain? Did he leave that
struggling man to his fate, and sail on
before the wind? Not a bit of it. He threw her up in the wind, fastened the
tiller, and ran down to bring the sick
man up in his arms, and brought him on
deck, propped him up against the helm,
and got out a little dingy the sloop carried
—not much bigger than a Panama hat—
and went after that man. What do you think of that young tarry-jacket, eh? What are you blushing at, George Manly? You can't bear to hear good deeds spoken of,
can you?"

"He did it," said Myra, with a glowing face. "He must not deny it, for I won't
believe it."

He passed a pleasant evening, and
after that found it very convenient to
drop into the captain's house during the
winter evenings to play a game of chess
with him. And when the captain was
not at home—and it was astonishing how
often that happened—he would stay to sing duets with Mary. George had a magnificent voice, and they sang well together. The winter wore away, and
George had fitted out the Flying Arrow
for her upward trip, when Captain Archer
came down to the boat.

"You don't go out to night, George?"
he said.

"I think so. The wind turns at midnight, and I think I must take advantage of it."

"Then you will have plenty of time.
Where have you been the last two weeks?
Mary had something to tell you. I must do it myself. My little girl is going to be married to-night."

George turned quickly away, and looked steadily across the harbor for a moment before he could trust himself to speak.

"Isn't it rather sudden?"

"Well, yes. I'll tell you about it. You see, he lives in Toronto, Gale Merrick
does, and it was there my little girl met him. They have been engaged over a year. I wonder she never told you, for she always said, if she could trust any one on earth, it would be George Manly."

"I'm glad she likes me," said George,
in a cold, dry tone. "I wish her every joy that can come to woman. She'll be a true wife to him, and she'll deserve all
the love that any man can give her."

"Why, you've got to come yourself, George. Do you think Myra would be married and you not there? Why, there isn't a man on earth she honors more than you, and I believe if she hadn't met Gale, and been promised to him before
she saw you, she would have given her heart to you."

"No," said George, sadly. "No such luck. I—I don't think I can come, captain. Say I wish them happy, but I can't get away. I would if I could."

"I don't believe she will take no for an answer then," said the captain. "She'll send the carriage down for you, sure."

And so she did. But George had disappeared, and none of the sailors seemed to know where he had gone. The carriage came twice, but each time he was away. Where was he? Crouched down in a secluded corner of the lumber-yard near at hand, fighting the battle with his true, honest heart. "I could have loved
her dearly," he said. "Life seems ended.
And she asked me to come and see her marriage, the innocent child! She never knew I loved her, never knew how my heart was crying out to her night and day. Oh, Myra! Myra!"

He was so near the schooner that he heard the carriage come and go twice,
and he had not found him.

they had been suffered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found
in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords,
16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had blades played with gold and richly ornamented.
There were also found with the swords
five large handle-buttons, four of which
are of alabaster and one of wood; all of
them are ornamented with gold nails.
Further, two golden shoulder-belts
(telamones), which were worn on the
shoulder across the breast; both are 4 ft.
long and 1 3/5 in. broad. There were
further found two large golden girdle
belts ornamented with circles and flowers;
one of them is composed of two pieces.
There was also found part of a similar
belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only
1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 1/5 in. broad. Further a splendidly ornamented large golden handle, probably of a sceptre. It terminates in a dragon's head, whose scales
seem to have been imitated by square
pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid
like mosaic. This is an object of marvellous beauty, of which Homer would have said thamnia ideethia (a wonder to look upon). There were also found seven
large and one small golden diadems—one
of the former is ornamented with golden
leaves. All of them show splendid ornaments of circles and spiral lines. Further
four golden ornaments of the knemides
(grooves) almost in form of a bracelet; one
comb of bone in a large handle or casing
of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear
it; one enormous, most magnificently
ornamented, massive golden bracelet,
weighing 360 grammes. In the centre
of the ornamentation of this bracelet is
soldered a separate piece of gold, representing the sun with his rays. The size
of this bracelet is so enormous that the
persons who has worn it must have had gigantic arms. It may have been worn on the legs. Quiet in opposition to the size of the bracelets are two massive golden seal
golden seal rings, the opening, of which is
so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only.
One of the seals represents two warriors
on a two-wheeled chariot with two horses which seem to run at full gallop; one of the warriors is holding a bow in his hand,
and has just shot an arrow at a stag; the stag is wounded, and in anguish turns his head. The other seal ring represents a warrior who has just vanquished his three enemies and is in the act of giving
with his uplifted sword a last blow to one of them wounded and kneeling before him on one knee; the latter tries to parry
the blow with his uplifted hands and with a lance, which he holds in his right, and seems to throw at his opponent. Another seems to be mortally wounded, for he lies on the ground leaning on both his hands. The third, who alone of all the four warriors has a helmet with a crest
on his head, is flying under the cover of an enormous shield which reaches from his neck to his heels; but still he turns his head towards his victorious enemy; and is in the act of throwing a lance at him. The anatomy of all the men is so well observed, their posture is so faithful to nature,
and everything is executed with so much art, that, when I brought to light these rings, I involuntarily exclaimed. "The author of the 'Iliad' and the 'Odyssey'
can only have been born and educated in a civilization which could produce such wonders. Only a poet who had masterpieces of art like these continually before his eyes could compose those divine poemes."

"At the head of one of the bodies was found a large and heavy golden helmet,
but it had been much crushed and had become nearly flat under the ponderous weight which pressed upon it. In its present state it is difficult to describe it.
Omits for part the openings for the eyes and mouth, as also a protuberance, ornamented
with small stars, are distinctly visible, as also in the top of the helmet, the tubs
for the crest. The back part is beautifully ornamented with an imitation of the hair. The face of the same body was covered with one of the golden masks mentioned in my last letter,
and its breast and sides by a 1 ft. 8 in.

"The gentleman must be very wet,"
said the girl. "Shall I not show you a room where you can have a fire? It will be a pleasure to me."

"Thank you, miss," said the young man, bashfully, turning his wet coat in his hands. "But I've an older mother
at home that will be anxious about me,
as I'm a sailor, and she knows I passed
the Welland, and will expect me."

"But you must leave your name, Sir.
My father is a sailor too, and will want to thank you."

"No need of that, miss. I only did as any one with the heart of a man would have done. But he knows me well enough—Captain George Manly, of the schooner Flying Arrow."

"Indeed!" she said, with a bright smile. "I have heard him speak of you often, and after what I have seen tonight, I can well believe all his praise of you."

Poor George blushed to the very roots
of his hair, and plunged into the cab,
ordering the driver in sailor fashion, to
"heave ahead," and was driven rapidly home. Next day, while he was on the schooner, a boy came down with a note from Captain Archer, asking him to come up; and he was only too glad to avail himself of the invitation, though he would not acknowledge that he wished to get another glimpse of Mary Archer's beautiful face. He went in the evening, and Captain Archer, somewhat recovered from his indisposition, received him with the bluff welcome which only sailors can give, and made him feel at home at once.
Then Mary came in, radiant in beauty,
and played melodies, mournful and gay,
with a feeling and expression which the young sailor never had dreamed of. He sat in a perfect maze, watching her white fingers threading in and out among the keys of the piano-forte, and evoking sweet music from the depths of the old instrument. He would have sat
there for hours watching her and listening to the music, but Captain Archer
would not have it. He liked to talk.

"Stop clawing that piano, Mary," he said, laughing. "What do you mean?
When my young friend Manly comes to see me, do you think I do not want to hear him talk? There, get a chair on this side of the fire. I'm glad you got in

ed steadily across the harbor for a moment before he could trust himself to
speak.

"Isn't it rather sudden?"

He was so near the schooner that he
heard the carriage come and go twice,
and was glad it had not found him. Then his mood changed, and he felt that he must see her before she changed her maiden name, or die. He went to the schooner, threw off the blouse which he wore over his clothing, and went up. A servant met him in the hall.

"He's come! he's come!" she cried.
"Oh, Mr. George, this will so please Miss Myra! She was almost crying because you would not come to see her married, and the carriage has just gone
for you again."

"I suppose I could not see her before—
before she is married?" faltered George.

"I'll ask," said the girl. "I know she'll come. Go into the parlor and I'll send her down."

Soon there was a rustle of muslin, and Myra floated into the room, so full of beauty and light that poor George stood,
like one transfixed, gazing at her. Radiant! That was a tame word to describe such beauty as hers in her bridal dress.
She gave him both hands in the hearty manner which had always characterized her treatment of him, and he took them
in a clasp which made her start.

"You dear, good George!" she said.
"So you thought better of it and come,
after all. I would never have forgiven you if you had staid away—never,
never."

"I am glad I came," he said, softly.
"It is better so—better, far better. I wish I knew the man you are to marry.
He must be a good man to be worthy of
you."

"How highly you think of me, George!"
she said. "I do not deserve it at your hands; but I would rather have you think well of me than any man—except Gale—in the wide world. There, you must let me go, for the bride-maids are calling me, and I am not quite ready.
How do I look?"

He gave her such a look that she needed no other answer, but fled with glowing cheeks up the stairs. An hour after,
George Manly stood in the shadow of the window-curtain, and saw her standing with her lover, and heard the solemn words fall from the lips of the divine:
"And whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

pressed ornamentation, consisting either of spiral lines or of circles. Further three very heavy golden breastpins, of which the one is 5 1/2, the other 5, and the third 4 1/2 inches long. The last is crowned with a ram, the two others with an ornament
in shape of a helmet, and the heads of all the three breastpins are perforated, probably to put in a flower. There were further found two masterly ornamented objects of massive gold in the form of crosses; also a large golden vase weighing 1 1/2 kilograms; it has two handles,
a large foot, and ornamented with three upper and two lower parallel lines, between which is a row of 14 stars; further
a large golden vase with one handle and an ornamentation representing seven beautiful flowers; another golden vase
with two handles; further a splendid little golden oenochoe or wine can, with an ornamentation of spiral lines. Further, six golden drinking cups, one of which is a depas amphiproteton with two handles,
on each of which is a pigeon, each of the two handles, being joined to the foot by two separate golden blades. This goblet reminds us of Nestor's goblet, which was also ornamented with pigeons (see "Iliad," XI, 632-635). One of the other goblets is ornamented with parallel flutings.
There were further found two small golden vessels; also eight silver vases, three of which are admirably conserved; one of the other five has the bottom and the mouth of bronze, below its bottom were found one hundred of the aforesaid golden buttons. I further found in this tomb thirteen large bronze vessels. This kind of vessel was in high esteem in the heroic
age, and we see them continually mentioned by Homer as prizes in the games.
I suppose that to each hero were given in the grave the goblets and other objects
which were dear to him in his lifetime,
having been won by him in the games, or having been given to him by his hosts as a pledge of hospitality and friendship. There was also found a large quantity of small perforated amber balls of necklaces
and a bronze or copper fork with three teeth, which had probably served on the funeral pyres. There were further found thirty-five arrow heads of obsidian. No-

as you did last night, George, for in the fall as it is, she coast is dangerous. "Did you hear of any wrecks?" "Ay, indeed; the upper lake coast is ed with them. THE TOMB OF AGAMEMNON.

Dr. Henry Schliemann, writing to the Times under date Mycenae November 28, continues the account of his great discoveries:—

"I continue the description of the jewels, &c., found with the five bodies in the fourth tomb. Among the most interesting objects of his sepulchre I reckon the magnificently ornamented gold buttons. Twelve are in the form of a cross, and one of them is 2 1-5 inches large and 8 inches long; three are somewhat smaller, and the remaining eight are of a still less size. Of splendidly ornamented round gold buttons were found in all 216, two of which are two inches in diameter, seven are of the size of a 5f. piece and 207 are still smaller. All these buttons, the lower part of which consists of a bone button in the form of our shirt-buttons, must have served on the clothes of the deceased, whereas all which show below only a flat piece of bone or wood have evidently served to decorate the sheaths of swords, lances, &c., to which they had been soldered with tin or otherwise fastened. There were in all found in this tomb 25 two-edged bronze swords, 16 of which are in a perfect state of conservation; four of them had hildes played with gold and richly ornamented. There were also found with the swords five large handle-buttons, four of which are of alabaster and one of wood; all of them are ornamented with gold nails. Further, two golden shoulder-belts (telamones), which were worn on the shoulder across the breast; both are 4 ft. long and 1 3-5 in. broad. There were further found two large golden girdle belts ornamented with curls and flowers; one of them is composed of two pieces. There was also found part of a similar belt and a child's golden girdle belt, only 1 ft. 4 in. long, and 2 15 in. broad. Further a splendidly ornamented large golden handle, probably of a sceptre. It terminates in a dragon's head, whose scales seem to have been imitated by square pieces of rock crystal, which are inlaid life mosaic. This is an object of marvellous beauty, of which Homer would have said thauma ideithia (a wonder to look upon). There were also found seven large and one small golden diadems—one of the former is ornamented with golden leaves. All of them show splendid ornaments of circles and spiral lines. Further four golden ornaments of the knemides (graves) almost in form of a bracelet; one comb of bone in a large handle or casing of gold, of the usual form, as ladies wear it; one enormous, most magnificently ornamented, massive golden bracelet, weighing 360 grammes. In the centre of the ornamentation of this bracelet is soldered a separate piece of gold, representing the sun with his rays. The size of this bracelet is so enormous that the persons who has worn it must have had gigantic arms. It may have been worn on the legs. Quiet in opposition to the size of the bracelets are too massive golden seal golden seal rings, the opening of which is so small that they would only fit a child of ten years. I, therefore, suppose that they may have been used as seals only. One of the seals represents two warriors thing could give a better idea of the great antiquity of those tombs than these stone arrow heads, for the "Illad" seems to know only arrow heads of bronze (e. g., Illad XIII., 650 and 662). Probably there had also been deposited bows and quivers in the tomb, but they would have been of wood, and would have rotted away. To my greatest regret, among the thousands of gold ornaments there is not even a single sign resembling writing, and it therefore appears certain that the sepulchres belong to an epoch which preceded the introduction of the Phœnician alphabet. Had the latter been known, the Mycenaean golden ins., continual efforts appears to have been directed to the invention of a new nomenclature, would have been very ambitious to show the novelty of the alphabet. A second proof of the immense antiquity of those tombs is the entire absence of any vestige of either iron or glass, or of any pottery, made on the potter's wheel. But the hand pottery has reached a high degree of perfection, such as has never been attained here in latter days by the pottery made on the wheel."

MATCHING A PATTERN.

One of the fascinating young men in an up-town dry-good store (says the San Francisco Post) is in trouble. It is the custom in the establishment from which he has just been dismissed to discharge a man who fails to sell to one of three successive customers. "Swapping" is the expressive technical term by which this failure is known in the dry-goods business. The rule is not universal, but it is by no means exceptional in dry-goods stores. However unjust it may be, it has a wonderfully stimulating effect on the elegant young men amenable to it, and when they cannot sell goods it is a safe inference that the customer is either supernaturally obdurate, inquisitive, or miserly. The young man referred to had "first call, last Friday morning; that is, the first customer who entered the store was by the rule of rotation his exclusive victim. Next morning this privilege would fall to the lot of some other clerk, and so on to the end of the list. The second was in an equal unpropitious state of mind, and, retired without effecting a purchase. On the decision of the third hung his fate. His ample cheek blanched as she darkened the doorway, for a more unlikely purchaser could with difficulty have been found. An old striped shawl was thrown carelessly over her shoulders, and partially concealed a roll of calico which the palpitatory heart of the clerk instinctively felt that she came to have matched. Now if there is anything in the dry-goods business more soul harrowing than another it is to match goods. The exact shade and texture have to be found, and last, but not least, the price must correspond. A feeling of sickening despair permeated the heaving breast of the unfortunate clerk as he, asked, "Well, ma'ma?"

She laid down five yards and a half of calico of an eccentric pattern, and intimated that the success of a great dress-making enterprise hinged on her fortune in getting another yard and a half of the

AN ACCOMPLISHED RASCAL.

One of the most prominent detectives of this city is Druskowitz, a Dalmatian. Among the remarkable cases in which he has been engaged was on which happened about ten years ago. In 1866 Vita Dourt, a Bordeaux wine merchant, went to Paris, and insured his life for $5,000. Shortly afterwards he went to London, in order to escape the consequences of a fraudulent bankruptcy. Some time later his wife, clad in widows attire, presented herself at the insurance office with the necessary legal document attesting her husband's death. There was nothing suspicious in the papers. Nevertheless the company determined to make some inquiries before handing over the amount of insurance. Druskowitz was called in, and he ascertained that on Dec. 1, 1866, some one named Bernardi had called at the register's office in Plaistow and registered the death of Dourt, and it was entered as due to heart disease. Druskowitz found out the undertaker who had conducted the funeral, and learned that everything had been properly ordered and paid for and that the funeral had been performed at Leytonstone. One thing seemed strange. The coffin had not been sent to any private house, but directed to the cemetery. Further inquiry failed to discover the name of any doctor attached to the certificate of death. The next step was to obtain an order for exhumation, and on the coffin being opened there was found, not the body of Vital Dourt, but a block of lead. Further inquiry elicited the fact that Dourt had been present at his own funeral, and had afterwards gone to America, whence he supplied his wife with the documents intended for the insurance company. Some time afterwards he returned to Europe, went to Antwerp, bought a ship, sent her to sea with a lot of rubbish, and having previously insured her for a large sum, had her burned. Arrested and brought to trial, he was visited by Druskowitz, who felt sure that this was the man he wanted. Dourt was found guilty and was condemned to imprisonment, with hard labor; but the French Government claimed him on extraordinary treaty, and he was tried on the charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, found guilty, and sentenced to penal servitude for a comparative short period. —London Echo.

The Ocean Steamship Amerique Beaches off Long Branch.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Jan. 7.—The transatlantic steamship Amerique, bound from Havre for New York, came ashore at Seabright, about four miles north of this place, at three o'clock this morning. There were 3 cabin, 51 second and fourth-classes passengers, and 162 officers and crew on board, all of whom, with the exceptions of three of the crew were saved soon after the ship struck. The captain ordered a small boat with the crew, composed of officers Brillaud and eleven men, to convey information ashore and obtain assistance. The steamship was then only seventy yards from the beach. The boat struck the beach, but the undertow and floating ice together, there being much of the latter, upset the boat and three of the crew were lost. Crews from Life Saving Stations 3 and 4 were on hand, and succeeded soon afterwards in throwing a line to the ship, and by the aid of the crew of the Amerique the life car was soon drawn on board. The passengers were at first afraid to enter the car, but Mr. Cornell Jewett and his wife, who were passengers on-board, entered and were safely drawn ashore, after which all the passengers and most of the crew were landed, five or six in the car at a time. The captain still remains aboard looking after the vessel. All the mails and specie were safely landed. The vessel lies well upon the beach, and it is thought she will be high and dry at low tide. The other seal ring represents a warrior who has just vanquished his three enemies and is in the act of giving with his uplifted sword a last blow to one of them wounded and kneeling before him on one knee; the latter tries to parry the blow with his uplifted hands and with a lance, which he holds in his right, and seems to throw at his opponent. Another seems to be mortally wounded, for he lies on the ground leaning on both his hands. The third, who alone of all the four warriors has a helmet with a crest on his head, is flying under the cover of an enormous shield which reaches from his neck to his heels; but still he turns his head towards his victorious enemy; and is in the act of throwing a lance at him. The anatomy of all the men is so well observed, their posture is so faithful to nature, and everything is executed with so much art, that, when I brought to light these rings, I involuntarily exclaimed, "The author of the 'Iliad' and the 'Odyssey' can only have been born and educated in a civilization which could produce such wonders. Only a poet who had masterpieces of art like these continually before his eyes could compose those divine poems."

The eyes of six expectant clerks were upon the doomed man. He felt the crisis of his peril had come. With an appearance of calmness that belied the turmoil of his feelings, he dived under the counter and handed out endless rolls of calico, varying from the radiant strawberry and moss-rose-marked, to the soberest gray. But he came not within thirteen supplementary colors of the required pattern. He burrowed in the cavernous depths of the lower shelves, and ransacked upper ones from the top round of a giddy step-ladder, but he found it not. An hour and a half had gone by, and his stock was nearly exhausted. The proprietor of the store and the book-keeper and porter had come out to witness his death struggle. Six times had the wearied lady started for the door, and six times he called her back and resumed his frenzied search. The last calico was unrolled, and he was about to drop his hat and gracefully step down and out, when a happy thought struck him.

Excuse me, madam," said he; "there's one piece I overlooked. Let me see that goods;" and he took her bundle, and diving under the counter, hacked off a yard and a half with the energy and promptness of rekindled hope.

"Here 'tis, madam; exactly what you required," said he, confidently spreading out the purloined goods.

She looked at it attentively for five minutes. "It does look like the pattern" said she, "but still I think it's not what I want. It's a good deal coarser than mine. If I can't get anything nearer to the pattern I'll come back and take it. Good morning."

She did come back in an hour, but not to buy the goods. He tried to dodge behind the counter, but with the keen-sightedness or womanly revenge she spotted him, and he was ignominiously hauled out and arraigned before his employer. The worst of it was that the latter, in view of the unprofitable energy show in his attempt to effect a sale, had concluded not to discharge him. With the evidence of his guilt so unmistakable, however, it would be fatal to the discipline of the house to keep him, and he was promptly dismissed. Until the old lady succeeds in getting a warrant for his arrest his name is charitably suppressed.

French Government claimed him on extraordinary treaty, and he was tried on the charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, found guilty, and sentenced to penal servitude for a comparative short period. —London Echo.

Most of the passengers will arrive in New York to-morrow afternoon.

The ship was in charge of the pilot taken on board yesterday. The sea at time was smooth but afterwards the weather thickened up very much. The Superintendent of the Steamship Company is at the wreck. The conduct of the crews of the life saving stations was of the most efficient nature and cannot be sufficiently applauded. They were promptly on hand, and by their exertions saved every one who was on board after they arrived. Had not the boat left the ship, all would have been saved.

A "CORPSE" SENT FOR BURIAL, RE-ANIMATED.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 5.—The Sentinel publishes a sensational story concerning a young man named Charles Hueston, living at Monroeville, in this county. On last Friday Hueston was attacked suddenly with congestion of the lungs, and after an illness of about two hours was pronounced dead. The body was being shaved by the barber when the razor slipped, making a slight cut in the cheek, from which the blood spurted freely. Some of the bystanders thought from this that Hueston was still alive, but not much attention was paid to this theory. Meanwhile Hueston's father, mother and sister arrived from Forest, O. The body was placed in a coffin and put on the Pittsburgh express train, but the lid of the coffin was screwed down. The sister of Hueston stayed in the express car to be near his body, and when about 20 miles west of Forest, gave a heartrending shriek and fell to the floor in a swoon. The train men rushed to her assistance, when they found the cause of her horror. The supposed dead body of her brother was moving and breathing. The face, with ghostly pallor, extended above the coffin, the eyes wide open, and presenting altogether a weird and ghostly spectacle. The services of physicians were secured, restoratives applied, and Hueston removed to the home of his parents in Forest where he now is. The prospects for his recovery are said to be good. His sister, since her fainting fit in the car, has been wholly insane, and fears are entertained that her reason is

There were further found two masterly ornamented objects of massive gold in the form of crosses; also a large golden vase weighing 14 kilograms; it has two handles, a large foot, and ornamented with three upper and two lower parallel lines, between which is a row of 14 stars; further a large golden vase with one handle and an ornamentation representing seven beautiful flowers; another golden vase with two handles; further a splendid little golden oenochoe, or wine can, with an ornamentation of spiral lines. Further, six golden drinking cups, one of which is a depos amphikypetlon with two handles, on each of which is a pigeon, each of the two handles, being joined to the foot by two separate golden blades. This goblet reminds us of Nestor's goblet, which was also ornamented with pigeons (see "Iliad," XI, 632-635). One of the other goblets is ornamented with parallel flutings. There were further found two small golden vessels; also eight silver vases, three of which are admirably conserved; one of the other five has the bottom and the mouth of bronze, below its bottom were found one hundred of the aforesaid golden buttons. I further found in this tomb thirteen large bronze vessels. This kind of vessel was in high esteem in the heroic age, and we see them continually mentioned by Homer as prizes in the games. I suppose that to each hero were given in the grave the goblets and other objects which were dear to him in his lifetime, having been won by him in the games, or having been given to him by his hosts as a pledge of hospitality and friendship. There was also found a large quantity of small perforated amber balls of necklaces and a bronze or copper fork with three teeth, which had probably served on the funeral pyres. He tried to dodge behind the counter, but with the keen-sightedness of womanly revenge she spotted him, and he was ignominiously hauled out and arraigned before his employer. The worst of it was that the latter, in view of the unprofitable energy show in his attempt to effect a sale, had concluded not to discharge him. With the evidence of his guilt so unmistakable, however, it would be fatal to the discipline of the house to keep him, and he was promptly dismissed. Until the old lady succeeds in getting a warrant for his arrest his name is charitably suppressed.

The shrieks of a woman attracted attention to a house on Harrison-avenue, Jersey City, occupied by Oscar Hudson, coloured, who lived with him. The neighbors ran in and found the woman lying on the floor insensible and almost entirely nude. Everything about the house bore evidence of a desperate struggle, in which her clothing had been torn off in shreds and scattered on the floor. Her shoulders and breast were parabolical, the skin being rubbed off and hanging in patches. She could not give any details, except that Hudson threw her down and tore her clothes, and held her on the floor while he attempted to pour a kettleful of boiling water down her throat. He then lifted her and held her in a sitting position on a red-hot cooking stove, burning her terribly.

AN EQUAL DIVISION.—"It's Christmas to-morrow," said Captain Jack Miller to his steward, "and you may put some plums in the cabin duff, but don't use many, and put 'em all in one end. I can't afford to give the mate plum-duff." "Plums in the duff to-day, steward?" said the mate next morning. "Yes sir," answered the steward, "but you won't get none; they're all goin' in the old man's end." That day, when the duff came on the table, just as the captain was going to help the mate to duff, that officer quietly turned the dish, remarking as he did so, "That's a curious old ware, Captain Miller!" "Yes," said the captain, as he restored the dish to its former position. "I've had that plate for a long time." "May I ask," said the mate, once more turning the dish, "where you got that plate?" "I think, if I recollect right," said the captain, as he put the blank end of the pudding towards the mate, "that I got it somewhere in the Straits." "I thought," the mate observed, as he slewed the plum end towards him, "that it was not made in England." "That'll do, Mr. Jones," said the captain; "that'll do; let the dish alone and I'll out the duff fore and aft."

taken on board yesterday. The sea at time was smooth but afterwards the weather thickened up very much. The Superintendent of the Steamship Company is at the wreck. The conduct of the crews of the life saving stations was of the most efficient nature and cannot be sufficiently applauded. They were promptly on hand, and by their exertions saved every one who was on board after they arrived. Had not the boat left the ship, all would have been saved.

A "CORPSE" SENT FOR BURIAL, RE-ANIMATED.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 5.—The Sentinel publishes a sensational story concerning a young man named Charles Hueston, living at Monroeville, in this county. On last Friday Hueston was attacked suddenly with congestion of the lungs, and after an illness of about two hours was pronounced dead. The body was being shaved by the barber when the razor slipped, making a slight cut in the cheek, from which the blood spurted freely. Some of the bystanders thought from this that Hueston was still alive, but not much attention was paid to this theory. Meanwhile Hueston's father, mother and sister arrived from Forest, O. The body was placed in a coffin and put on the Pittsburgh express train, but the lid of the coffin was screwed down. The sister of Hueston stayed in the express car to be near his body, and when about 20 miles west of Forest, gave a heartrending shriek and fell to the floor in a swoon. The train men rushed to her assistance, when they found the cause of her horror. The supposed dead body of her brother was moving and breathing. The face, with ghostly pallor, extended above the coffin, the eyes wide open, and presenting altogether a weird and ghostly spectacle. The services of physicians were secured, restoratives applied, and Hueston removed to the home of his parents in Forest where he now is. The prospects for his recovery are said to be good. His sister, since her fainting fit in the car, has been wholly insane, and fears are entertained that her reason is permanently dethroned.

THE FASHIONS.

As the fashions this winter are designed as if with a view to afford protection against unusually severe weather. The greatest novelty in winter fabrics are the fleeced silks and camel's hair clothes, which seems to realize the ideal of a winter fabric in affording strength without weight. Of cloaks there is an infinite variety. Square and striped Indian shawls are much worn. The toque is the winter hat or bonnet par excellence. It has a straight pleated capron and a firm which sets close to the head. The materials are fur, velvet or silk, or a combination of the two latter. Fashionable modistes lay great stress just now upon rigorous simplicity of style, combined with richness of fabric. The later models of rich dresses use one fabric, the costliest for the body of the dress and the plainer one for trimming. A style with narrow skirts, on overskirts, and a few narrow flounces, either forming the small semi-train or carried round, is coming in vogue for evening wear. The newest colored skirts for winter wear are of felt or light twilled all-wool English waterproof cloth, in dark solid colors, the varieties being crimson and navy blue.

A gentleman who gave a goose to his friend Patrick as a Christmas present met him the other day and asked him how he liked the goose. "Och, y'r honor, sure it was a fine bird. I never see a goose or a gander I don't think of y'r honor."

ALL FOR LOVE.—A young lady residing near London was so wounded in her tender feelings the other day by the marriage of a young man, that she sought out her stay in this "vale of tears" by a dose of strichnine. But she was felled in her attempt and may yet live to repent her rashness and folly.

could be taxed for city local purposes it would make it comparatively light to Ottawa, but in the same proportion hard for the rest of the country.

Coming nearer home, the town of Napanee has the fine Court House, the Jail and the Registry Office, built by the people of the whole county at a large expense, and it would be very handy for the town if a change was made in our law, and a tax of some hundreds of dollars put on these, for the benefit of the town, at the expense of the people of the county as a whole? Under the circumstances it is easily understood why a Town Council would favor a law to abolish such exemptions, but let tax payers of the Townships enquire the reason why their representatives in the County Council and in the Local Parliament, would support a change that would involve such additional burdens on them. The agitation is one of a character such as needs watching, and men should see to it that they are not benevolent with the taxes of their own municipal corporations and others besides before it is too late.

Every one knows that the large cities and towns, where our public building are erected, derive immense local advantages from those large outlays of public money. They not only give employ to a large number of mechanics and laborers, at the general expense of the country, but they beautify the towns where located, and tend, directly, to increase the number of officers attached to each place. If, in addition to these expenses, these costly institutions should be taxed for municipal purposes, in whatever municipality they happen to be located, then a state of things will be inaugurate of which the whole people may well complain.

It was pointed out, too, in connection with the debate, that if public property is to be taxed by each municipality, then the new townships in which Crown Lands are located would come in for their share of the advantage, and of course the rest of the country would be laid under contribution. The railway property in the Maritime Provinces, costing between twenty and thirty millions belonging to the Dominion, and if taxed for the benefit of the cities and towns of those Provinces, the people of Ontario would be required to pay a large proportion of the whole of it, as we have to pay the largest proportion of the taxes of the whole Dominion.

In that case, too, it would not be long until a fine sum would be required for the local purposes of Manitoba and the North West in connection with the Pacific Railway, and where the end would be, it is not easy now to see.

In regard to the exemption from tax of our houses of religious worship, it does not seem to us that much need be said. There are few people, even among those who do not frequent our churches; but have sufficient respect for the moral and educational influences of our churches to be willing to see them exempt from the ordinary burdens of tax. Few will deny that their existence is a saving to the country, as moral teachers and preventatives to crime and immorality, which if committed, would require a large outlay for punishment.

We fancy that our Government will be well sustained by the people in refusing to comply with the demands of those cities and towns who would, by such a change tax all Canada for their own local benefit.

OUR PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

It has been a popular cry with the opposition, during the past few years, that our public expenditure, in the Province of Ontario, is each year on the increase, and consequently there is unmistakable evidence that the Government is an expensive and extravagant one. It has well answered the purpose of those making this cry to quote the figures of the total public expenditure of the Province of Ontario, for the year 1872-73, and

A FATHER MURDERED BY HIS SON.

The London, Ont., Free Press of the 6th gives a harrowing account of the murder of Wm. Griggs, a Lonsfield, Essex, Ont., farmer by his son, who is 25 years of age. The men had both been drinking heavily, and on reaching their home the son gave the lie to his father. At this the old man sprang to his feet and grasped his son. A scuffle ensued, which warmed the two men up, and thoroughly aroused their worst passions. Chairs, tables and other articles of furniture were upset, and things were strewn around the room in a promiscuous manner. The other members of the family screamed at the top of their voices, but none of them dared to interfere between the infuriated father and son. After a long tussle, the assurance of the younger man overcame the strength of his father, and he threw him violently to the floor, driving the breath from his body. As the father lay there gasping for breath, the infuriated son kicked him on the head with his heavy stogs boots, and by chance struck a fatal point, the right temple. A spasmodic tremor ran through his frame, and his soul took its flight. He neither moved nor spoke. The son stood over him for a moment, ready to repeat the kick, if his father offered further resistance, but not seeing him move he stooped over and spoke to him. Receiving no answer he took hold of the old man's hand and shook him, but he exhibited no signs of life. Letting go the hand, the father's arm dropped limber upon his lifeless form. Then the son in his whiskey muddled condition, began to realize what he had done. In a semi-stupid state he stood gazing at the corpse of him who gave him life, and from whom he had just taken it, while the other members of the family, in a frenzy of despair at the awful scene they had just witnessed, ran around the room ringing their hands and weeping in the most pitiful manner. As the son fully realized the terrible crime he had committed, the effect of the liquor passed rapidly away. Without speaking a word to the other members of the family, or answering the many questions put to him, he walked deliberately from his home and delivered himself to the nearest officer. He is now lying in jail awaiting trial for murder.

THE PLAYFUL DUEL.

WHAT THE SUN SKITTER THINKS ABOUT IT

The spectacle of two hot-headed young men scouring the country for a convenient place to pepper each other's diaphragm and disarrange each other's internal economy is not by any means an ennobling one. Nor will it add much to the romance of the occasion if the combatants are marched before a Justice of the Peace and arranged on a charge of attempted homicide, with there seconds as accessories before the deed. Likewise will it be a warning to young men never to promise to marry anybody whom they don't intend to marry, particularly if the object of adoration has a big brother, and the big brother be in the habit of carrying horsewhips. There was a lamentable failure on the part of the New York papers in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting. This can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country deluged with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit, instead of the shot lodging in one of the seconds, or some neighboring farmer's cow. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms when there are other people in the vicinity. If it was not for these young New York "bloods" were in quest of, they have certainly obtained it, for even the

TAX EXEMPTIONS.

The first division of the House, during the present session, has been on the much agitated questions of the exemption of church property and the Government property of taxation for local purposes, in the municipalities where they are located. It is well known that, for some months past the City Council of Toronto has been actively agitating for an amendment to our present license laws, so as to require such properties to be hereafter taxed for municipal purposes. The principle advocated, in connection with this agitation, is that all property of all kinds in each city, town or other municipality shall be held liable to municipal assessment and taxation, and a committee of the Toronto Council was appointed who sent circulars to various other Councils over the Province asking them to join in the demand. Many of these Councils did so, very thoughtlessly and foolishly we think, including our County Council. An effect is being made to move the Provincial Parliament on the strength of these favourable responses, and the Opposition has taken the opportunity of trying to make a little political capital out of it.

When the Governor's speech was being discussed in the House, Mr. Lauder, on behalf of the Opposition, moved an amendment expressing regret that the matter of municipal exemption had not been referred to in the speech. The amendment, if adopted, would of course, have been considered as one of want of confidence in the Government, and it was so vaguely worded as to commit those who supported it to no line of action or policy whatever, though it was well understood to be a direct condemnation to those who favor the existing exemption of church property, and public property from existing taxes.

The resolution was voted down by a large majority, as was nearly a strict party vote—the Opposition favoring the amendment, and the Government supporters opposing it. Among those voting for the amendment, in opposition to the Government, we find the name of Mr. Grange, and on the other side that of Mr. Dawson.

be willing to see them exempt from the ordinary burdens of tax. Few will deny that their existence is a saving to the country, as moral teachers and preventatives to crime and immorality, which if committed, would require a large outlay for punishment.

OUR PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

It has been a popular cry with the opposition, during the past few years, that our public expenditure, in the Province of Ontario, is each year on the increase, and consequently there is unmistakable evidence that the Government is an expensive and extravagant one. It has well answered the purpose of those making this cry to quote the figures of the total public expenditure of the Province at the beginning of Confederation and the figures of to-day. Those expecting to make political capital out of these figures depend largely on the ignorance of the people. They seem to take it for granted, when they quote these increased figures, that the people do not know that our public institutions have increased from year to year, and consequently there must be an increase of outlay, as well as of the work to be performed in our various public offices. Since the Province of Ontario had a separate existence the Central Prison has been built and put in operation. It was a public necessity, and has cost the Province thousands, and is a permanent additional burden to the public expenditure. The same may be said in reference to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Belleville, the Asylum for the Blind at Brantford, the additional Insane Asylum at Hamilton, the additional Normal School at Ottawa, the Asylum for Idiots at Orillia, and a considerable number of other public institutions, in various sections of the Province, every one of which is needed.

Taking all these things into consideration we do not see that a good reason exists for complaint in regard to our increased expenditure. We must expect that, from year to year, as the country increases in wealth and population there will be increased demands for public aid in various directions and these must be increased expenditure.

The Public Accounts, for Ontario, have just been laid upon the table of the House, and they show that our total public expenditure, for the Province, for 1875, was $2,063,560. For the year, 1877, it was 2,342,329. Showing a decreased expenditure of 278,789, or considerable over quarter of a million of dollars. We believe that when the accounts of 1876 are published it will be shown that our present excellent Provincial Government have shown equal care and economy in connection with our public funds. Of course we may expect a strong Tory cry about "extravagance" and "recklessness" and all that kind of thing, but the people have had so much of that kind of cry from the same source, and the most of it has turned out unfounded, that very little attention is given to it.

In a few days the Provincial Treasurer will make his Budget speech, and it will be seen that, notwithstanding all the cry there has been, our Provincial finances are in a most healthy condition, and there is a large surplus now to the credit to the Province. In fact the people now understand that the Mowat Government have not only given us important legislative reforms, but have been equally fortunate in their reform in the administration of our public affairs.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry a few months ago. Not far from 30,000 cavalry were in line. A little child—a girl—of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either from fright or some other cause, rushed out into the open field just as a squadron of Hussar's galloped sweeping around from the main body. They made the detour for the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose carriage was drawn up in that part of the parade ground. Down came the flying squadron, charging at a mad gallop down directly upon the child. The mother was paralyzed, as were others for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of horror, for the child's destruction seemed inevitable—and such a terrible destruction—the trampling to death by a thousand horsemen. Directly under the feet of the horses was the little one—another instant must seal its doom—when a stalwart Hussar, who was in the front line, without slackening his speed or losing his hold threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted the child, and placed it in safety upon his saddlebow; and this he did without changing his pace or breaking the correct alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousand applauded when they knew. Two women there were who could only sob forth their gratitude in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been for the Hussar when his Emperor, taking from his own breast the richly enamelled Cross of the Order of Maria Theresa hung it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

The first division of the House, during the present session, has been on the much agitated questions of the exemption of church property and the Government property of taxation for local purposes, in the municipalities where they are located. It is well known that, for some months past the City Council of Toronto has been actively agitating for an amendment to our present license laws, so as to require such properties to be hereafter taxed for municipal purposes. The principle advocated, in connection with this agitation, is that all property of all kinds in each city, town or other municipality shall be held liable to municipal assessment and taxation, and a committee of the Toronto Council was appointed who sent circulars to various other Councils over the Province asking them to join in the demand. Many of these Councils did so, very thoughtless and foolishly we think, including our County Council. An effect is being made to move the Provincial Parliament on the strength of these favourable responses, and the Opposition has taken the opportunity of trying to make a little political capital out of it.

When the Governors speech was being discussed in the House, Mr. Lauder, on behalf of the Opposition, moved an amendment expressing regret that the matter of municipal exemption had not been referred to in the speech. The amendment, if adopted, would of course, have been considered as one of want of confidence in the Government, and it was so vaguely worded as to commit those who supported it to no line of action or policy whatever, though it was well understood to be a direct condemnation to those who favor the existing exemption of church property, and public property from existing taxes.

The resolution was voted down by a large majority, as was nearly a strict party vote—the Opposition favoring the amendment, and the Government supporters opposing it. Among those voting for the amendment, in opposition to the Government, we find the name of Mr. Grange, and on the other side that of Mr. Deroche.

In connection with the debate the facts were more fully developed than before that so far as Toronto and the other large cities are concerned it is easy to account for their zeal in connection with the present agitation. If the law can be changed, why then all property in the city would be assessed and taxed for city purposes, and the people of the whole Province would be, so far, called upon to pay into the city treasury. The Parliamentary buildings, belonging to the people of the whole of Ontario, are located in Toronto, and they would then be assessed for some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the people of the entire Province would be required to pay the tax upon the amount for the benefit of the Toronto treasury. The Normal Schools, the University Buildings, the Central Prison, and other public institutions of that kind, all located in that city, would all be taxed, and every farmer and property holder in the Province would have additional tax levied upon him to make up the amounts. Nor would it end with Toronto. The city of Ottawa has the Dominion Government buildings, a Normal School, and other important institutions, which have cost our whole people some million of dollars, and if all granted, when they quote these increased figures, that the people do not know that our public institutions have increased from year to year, and consequently there must be an increase of outlay, as well as of the work to be performed in our various public offices. Since the Province of Ontario had a separate existence the Central Prison has been built and put in operation. It was a public necessity, and has cost the Province thousands, and is a permanent additional burden to the public expenditure. The same may be said in reference to the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Belleville, the Asylum for the Blind at Brantford, the additional Insane Asylum at Hamilton, the additional Normal School at Ottawa, the Asylum for Idiots at Orillia, and a considerable number of other public institutions, in various sections of the Province, every one of which is needed.

Taking all these things into consideration we do not see that a good reason exists for complaint in regard to our increased expenditure. We must expect that, from year to year, as the country increases in wealth and population, there will be increased demands for public aid in various directions and these must be increased expenditure.

The Public Accounts, for Ontario, have just been laid upon the table of the House, and they show that our total public expenditure, for the Province, for 1875, was $2,063,560 For the year, 1874, it was 2,342,329 Showing a decreased expenditure of 278,769, or considerable over quarter of a million of dollars. We believe that when the accounts of 1876 are published it will be shown that our present excellent Provincial Government have shown equal care and economy in connection with our public funds. Of course we may expect a strong Tory cry about "extravagance" and "recklessness" and all that kind of thing, but the people have had so much of that kind of cry from the same source, and the most of it has turned out unfounded, that very little attention is given to it.

In a few days the Provincial Treasurer will make his Budget speech, and it will be seen that, notwithstanding all the cry there has been, our Provincial finances are in a most healthy condition, and there is a large surplus now to the credit to the Province. In fact the people now understand that the Mowat Government have not only given us important legislative reforms, but have been equally fortunate in their reform in the administration of our public affairs.

DEATH OF MR. PETER GRAHAM M. P. P.

KINGSTON, Jan. 12.—Peter Graham, member of the Local Legislature for the County of Frontenac, died at his home in the Township of Pittsburg this morning.

Mr. Graham died after a month's illness. He was a gentleman entitled to the palm for good nature. His disposition was the embodiment of the term. He was upright and just in the fullest sense. His happy character made him very popular and his path in public life an easy one. He was Reeve of Pittsburg for years and was elected Warden of Frontenac by a unanimous vote. He was elected for the Local Legislature at the general election for Ontario in 1874 by a large majority. He was for the past two years President of the newly established Midland Central Fair. For almost a score of years he has been an officer in the Kingston Field Battery. The most prominent memorial however to Mr. Graham's name is the free roads of Pittsburg.

Over one hundred thousand unfortunate have found a refuge on Austrian territory, flying from the Turk. So heavy and continued has been the influx that there has been recalled the precedent of the colonization of Booska, lying between the Danube and the Theiss, by the Serbs at the close of the seventeenth century.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry a few months ago. Not far from 30,000 cavalry were in line. A little child—a girl—of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either from fright or some other cause, rushed out into the open field just as a squadron of Hussars was sweeping around from the main body. They made the detour for the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose carriage was drawn up in that part of the park ground. Down came the flying squadron, charging at a map gallop down directly upon the child. The mother was paralyzed, as were others for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of horror, for the child's destruction seemed inevitable—such a terrible destruction—the trampling to death by a thousand heavy hoofs. Directly under the feet of the horses was the little one—another instant must seal its doom—when a stalwart hussar, who was in the front line, without slackening his speed or loosening his hold threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted the child, and placed it in safety upon his saddlebow; and this he did without changing his pace or breaking the correct alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousand applauded when they knew. Two women there were who could only sob forth their gratitude in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been for the hussar when his Emperor, taking from his own breast the richly enamelled Cross of the Order of Maria Theresa hung it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

FATHER MURDERED BY HIS SON.

The London, Ont., Free Press of the 11th gives a harrowing account of the murder of Wm. Griggs, a Lonsfield, Essex, Ont., farmer by his son, who is 35 years of age. The men had both been drinking heavily, and on reaching their home the son gave the lie to his father. At this the old man sprang to his feet and grasped his son. A scuffle ensued, which warmed the two men up, and thoroughly aroused their worst passions. Chairs, tables and other articles of furniture were upset, and things were run around the room in a promiscuous manner. The other members of the family screamed at the top of their voices, it now of them dared to interfere between the infuriated father and son. After a long tussle, the endurance of the younger man overcame the strength of his father, and he threw him violently to the floor, driving the breath from his body. As the father lay there gasping for breath, the infuriated son kicked him in the head with his heavy boots, and by chance struck a fatal point, the temple. A spasmodic tremor ran through his frame, and his soul took its flight. He neither moved nor spoke. The son stood over him for a moment, ready to repeat the kick, if his father offered further resistance, but not seeing him move he stooped over and spoke to him. Receiving no answer he took hold of the old man's hand and shook him, but he exhibited no signs of life. Letting go the hand, the father's arm dropped under him by his lifeless form. Then the son in his whisky muddled condition, began to realize what he had done. In a dazed state he stood gazing at the corpse of him who gave him life, and from whom he had just taken it, while the other members of the family, in a frenzy of despair at the awful scene they had just witnessed, ran around the room ringing their hands and weeping in the most pitiful manner. As the son fully realized the terrible crime he had committed, the effect of the liquor passed rapidly away. Without speaking a word to the other members of the family, or answering the many questions put to him, he walked deliberately from his home and delivered himself to the nearest officer. He is now lying in jail awaiting trial for murder.

THE PLAYFUL DUEL.

HAT THE SUN SKITTER THINKS ABOUT IT

The spectacle of two hot-headed young men scouring the country for a convenient place to pepper each other's diaphragm and disarrange each other's internal economy is not by any means an ennobling one. Nor will it add much to the romance of the occasion if the combatants are marched before a Justice of the Peace and arranged on a charge of attempted homicide, with their seconds as accessories before the deed. Likewise will it be a warning to young men never to promise to marry anybody whom they don't intend to marry, particularly if the object of adoration has a big brother, and is big brother be in the habit of carrying horsewhips. There was a lamentable failure on the part of the New York papers in providing the public with trustworthy details of the hostile meeting. This can only be atoned for at this late hour, by the publication by the New York Herald, of a map of the injured man's viscera, showing the route of the bullet, with the portions of country deaged with gore printed in red ink. The most remarkable feature in connection with this tragic affair, is the fact that one of the combatants was actually hit, instead of the shot lodging in one of the seconds, or some neighboring farmer's cow. This serves to show how easily accidents may happen, and how careful people should be in handling firearms when there are other people in the vicinity. If it was not for these young New York "bloods" were in quest of, they have certainly obtained it, for even the

HAMILTON, Jan. 12.—THE DUNDON ACT.—Petitions are being circulated throughout the city, and very numerous, signed by men of all political parties, praying the House of Commons to pass an Act requiring that where the Dundon Act is submitted to the vote of the people that vote shall be taken by ballot on the same principle as in Parliamentary and municipal elections. It is believed by many ratepayers that this is the only means by which a conscientious vote of the people can be obtained on that question.

CANADIAN CATTLE FOR ENGLAND.—The value of Canadian cattle is becoming more and more appreciated in the Old Country, as is proved by the importation of stock which is now constantly taking place, the Dominion and Mississippi line being chiefly conspicuous in the traffic. On the 19th of last month, one of their steamers, the Dominion, landed sixty head of cattle, said to be the finest ever imported into England. They were sent by Mr. Lingham, of Belleville, Ontario, and, owing to the navigation of the St. Lawrence being closed, were shipped on board the Dominion at Philadelphia. The result of last season's importation of Canadian cattle is considered highly encouraging, and there are, therefore, at present, hundreds of thousands of cattle fattening in Canada ready to export to England, one firm alone near Toronto having upwards of 1,800 head feeding for the English market. The whole of the Dominion's freight were landed in excellent condition, and immediately despatched to London for the Christmas fat cattle show, the average weight of each being being 2,100 lbs.

BARBER'S TRIAL.—The trial of Barber for embezzlement from the Montreal Bank took place at Toronto on the 11th inst. F. Fenton appeared for the Crown, E. Crombie for the Bank of Montreal, and M. C. Cameron for the prisoner. The latter pleaded not guilty, and elected to be tried summarily. J. B. MacIn testified that he deposited a number of City of Toronto and other bonds in the Montreal Bank here, in June, 1874. Witness identified the bonds produced as the ones deposited. They are as follows:—4,194, $400, August, 1872; 3,438, $2,000, 1st of September, 1869; 3,446, $2,000, 1st of February, 1869; 3,824, $2,000, 1st of September, 1869; 4,194, $400, 1st of August, 1874; 3,484, $1,000, 1st of September, 1869; and 4,237, $1,000, 12th of September, 1872. Witness did not authorize the Bank to dispose of them in any way. G. W. Yerker, manager of the branch in this city, testified that he laid the information against the prisoner. It charged him with abstracting the bonds mentioned by the last witness. He first discovered that they were missing on the 16th of December, prisoner confessed he had taken them. Yerker in the box for some time, but no facts of importance were elicited beyond those mentioned above. At the conclusion of witness's evidence, Mr. Cameron withdrew the plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty. The magistrate then remanded prisoner till to-morrow. The Magistrate on Tuesday afternoon, commenting upon the enormity of his offence, sentenced Barber to five years in penitentiary with hard labor.

He is represented as having but one lock and that lock is the fore-lock, the lock on the front of his head. If you are quick enough in your movements to seize him by that you may hold him fast and press him into your services; but if you lose that hold, and allow him to slip past, there is not a single hair on the back part of his smooth and polished pate which you can lay hold of.

GENTLEMEN:

I have been suffering from a severe attack of Bronchitis accompanied with great bodily weakness. I was recommended to try your PHOSFOS-ZONE, which I did, and it acted like a charm. I felt my health improving every day, and also my strength much increased. I think it very valuable medicine. It has done wonders for me.

each.

For the information of Christians generally, it may be briefly stated that this institution, now in full operation, owes its origin to the liberality of a Christian gentleman, a resident of Toronto, who has invested a portion of his means in the enterprise, as a free-will offering to the Lord, with the view of scattering broadcast over our land, TRACTS, BOOKS, &c., which unfold the exalted privileges of the believers, and treat of the "LIFE OF FAITH" or Trust, and of the power and peace of HOLINESS, and Gospel and Evangelical Literature.

Special notice is called to the fact that this is

No Denominational Institution.

It is neither connected with, nor under the patronage of any particular church. All the Publications it issues will be strictly evangelical, and will meet the wants of all Christians. Especially the Books, &c., &c., will be those published by the Willard Tract Repository of Boston, under the care of the well known Dr. CULLIS.

ALL PROFITS that may be made will be devoted to the establishment of a fund for gratuitous distribution of the Tracts and Books, to persons and places where they are needed, as may be directed by the Committee. We beg also to say that this Fund for free distribution is open for donations to all who may desire to help in this work of God.

We ask all who may desire to promote the higher spiritual life of the churches and to help in winning souls for Christ, to co-operate with us by circulating sound religious literature throughout the land.

CARRIAGE MAKERS!

CARRIAGE SPRINGS AND AXLES, CARRIAGE AND TIRE BOLTS.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry a few months ago. Not far from 30,000 cavalry were in line. A little child—a girl—of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either from fright or some other cause, rushed out into the open field just as a squadron of Hussars came sweeping around from the main body. They made the detour or the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose position was drawn up in that part of the parade ground. Down came the lying squadron, charging at a map gallop down directly upon the child. The mother was paralyzed, as were others for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of horror, for the child's destruction seemed inevitable—such a terrible destruction—the trampling to death by a thousand heavy troops. Directly under the feet of the horse was the little one—another instant must seal its doom—when a stalwart Hussar, who was in the front line, without slackening his speed or losing his hold threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted the child, and placed it in safety upon his saddlebow; and thus he did without changing his pace or breaking the correct alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousand applauded when they knew. Two women here were who could only sob forth their gratitude in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been or the Hussar when his Emperor, taking from his own breast the richly enamelled Cross of the Order of Maria Theresa hung it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

GENERAL NEWS.

THE KINGSTON PRESBYTERY.—This Presbytery will meet in Belleville on the second Tuesday in April.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12.—Yesterday the police seized one hundred and fifty-three oaves of bread for being light weight.

HALIFAX, Jan. 12.—The snow is reported six feet deep in the woods, and unburying operations are being vigorously prosecuted.

NEW AGREEMENT.—The G. T. R. engineers have been supplied with copies of their new agreement, and all difficulty is now believed to be at an end.

Justice in Canada don't always respect the swells and vets of society. M. Barbar received the same sentence, as a poor beggar on a highway robber.

Measures are being taken to secure the necessary co-operation of salesmen here, and to import at least 500 head of cattle a week during the next year from the Dominion.—Whig.

Captain Boynton has accomplished his promised task of swimming down the River Po, from Turin to Verrea, a distance of 800 miles, in 96 hours without a single stoppage.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Jan. 10.—Ellen Hassett, aged fifty-three, was fatally burned to-day. It is supposed that her clothes caught fire, while asleep, from a pipe which she had been smoking.

CHURCH DEDICATION.—A telegram from Picton says: The handsome new Canada Methodist Church on the mountain, near the lake, was dedicated by the Rev. Alex Sutherland, of Toronto. The cost of the building was $3,100, most of which has been paid.

POSTAL.—Newspapers may now be sent to Great Britain from the office of publication at the rate of one cent per pound, the same as to offices in Canada. Postal cards may also be used at two cents each. Transient newspapers may be sent at the rate of two cents for each four ounces, or fraction of four ounces.

him until he is past and gone from us. Fifteen hundred and Seventy Six already begins to be forgotten; it has gone clean out of sight and it will soon be out of mind. And though it is hard to believe so, depend upon it, the new year will just go like the old.

Well what is the moral of all this? what is the lesson which we should learn from these tricks of time? Act with promptness and decision. What is to be done, let it be done at once! If a thing is worthy of being done at all, probably it is worth being done now. What is right to do and can be done to-day, should never be left for to-morrow. If the Express is to be subscribed for, now is the time to do it; if the subscription is unpaid, now is the time to pay it.

And then, is not what has been said above the sum of what has been laid with an eloquent and persuasiveness which we cannot pretend to imitate by our friend Russel again and again. Has that insurance of your life been effected yet? You know a score or two who intends just as sincerely as you do to ensure their lives, but they did without doing it and left their families in embarrassment in consequence of their neglecting it until it was too late. In the absence of our benevolent-hearted friend who has given so many salutary warnings on this head, allow us to respectfully but earnestly plead with you to attend to this matter without delay. Don't let the sun go down before it is done.

The Travellers Life and Accident Insurance Company of Hartford, continues to be the favorite company doing business here, and Hanson in the room and stead of Russel who is 'labouring with' the benighted denezens of Muddy Little York to induce them to look after the interests of their families by insuring their lives. Hanson will be found in the old place over Coxall & Paisley's.

HANG UP YOUR BARN LAMP.

Don't ever stand your barn lamp on the floor or any other place where it will be liable to get turned over while the wick is lighted. Whenever we enter the barn with a lighted lamp, it is hung on a strong nail at one end of the feeding room, so that the light will shine to the further end. When the lamp is hanging at that point one can see to cut fodder with the hay cutter, pump water for the live stock, mix food, fill the racks or anything else that is to be done in the feeding apartment without any danger of turning the lamp over. The barn lamp is never set down. When we go into the stable to milk the cow, to fitter the floor, to groom the animals, the first thing is to hang the lamp on a nail which has been driven into some post or joist or beam on purpose for the lamp. No other article is ever hung on the nails where the lamp is to be hung. If it is necessary to go on the mow to pitch down hay or other fodder, the lamp is always secured on an appropriate nail before a forkful of hay is lifted. By such an orderly arrangement one can always rely on the light which the lamp will shed around him, and he always feel assured that the building will not be set on fire. Many a large barn has burned to ashes simply because the lamp was not hung on a nail where it could not be turned over. We have seen the farmers move about in their barns with a lighted candle in one hand, which was set down here and there at places where it was liable to be turned over and to set hay on fire. One cannot be too careful when carrying a lighted candle or lamp where there are shavings, hay, straw or other dry combustible material. If a lamp must be taken into the stable or barn let large nails be driven into the timber so that heedless employees can have no excuse for getting a barn lamp down.

SLEEPING ROOMS.

The writer of this has suffered much during the past month through the false impression that many have, that it is healthy to sleep in a cold room. There is no reason nor sense in this idea. There may be a goodly amount of self-denial in retiring to a room the temperature of which is many degrees below freezing, and stepping in between sheets that strike a chill to every part of the body, but it is self-denial for no good purpose. This kind of a toughening process may be well enough in theory, but revolting in practice. We go to bed for the purpose of getting sleep and rest, but it requires the skin of a pachyderma to resist the temperature of icy sheets, and not shiver until every muscle is exhausted.

It may seem like indulgence to warm up a bed with an iron or soap-stone before jumping into it, but rather than suffer the misery of shaking with cold for hours, one can afford to be twitted with self-indulgence or being called "babyish." The mother who goes and warms the beds upon cold winter nights with an iron for her children, rather than have them suffer with cold, has the respect and sympathy of the writer, even if the children are of large growth. There is certainly no harm to come from breathing warm air if there is enough oxygen in it and it has not been poisoned in some way, and hence we see no objection to a stove in a sleeping room under proper management and restrictions.

THE TORTURE OF CHECK REINS.

The severe bearing reins as used by coachmen generally is nothing more or less than horrible and needless torture to the poor suffering horse—torture while in harness, and the cause of internal maladies when he is put back into his stall for food and supposed rest. If there is one thing more opposed to natural health than another it is the increased production

THE TORTURE OF CHECK REINS.

The severe bearing reins as used by coachmen generally is nothing more or less than horrible and needless torture to the poor suffering horse—torture while in harness, and the cause of internal maladies when he is put back into his stall for food and supposed rest. If there is one thing more opposed to natural health than another it is the increased production and that the waste of the saliva which is necessary to the functions of the body. Who ever saw a horse in a field foaming at the mouth? Who ever saw a properly fitted hunter do so when ridden to hounds in an easy bit and obedient to a light hand? I never saw it, nor do I think that any one else has seen it; therefore, to begin with, the position of the carriage-horse's head; gagged with a bearing rein, out of place, and that profusion of saliva ever falling from the mouth, must be something essentially wrong. The perpetually oasing head arises from the fevered state of the poor animal, and his consequent attempts to get rid of an irritating infection, and not from the vulgar idea of a fiery wish to be put in action. Of this I am certain, that the less artificial constraint you put into a horse's mouth the better. The less you lumber his graceful limbs with lumber in the shape of harness the better. The freer you keep his limbs and his respiratory organs the longer he will serve you and the greater will be the labor he will perform for you. Frankley F. Berkeley.

COLD FEET.

It's just the season for cold feet, and many ills are attendant upon a lack of circulation in the extremities. People who are troubled with cold extremities are apt to have headaches, loose their appetite and feel bad continually, and these results can only be avoided by removing the cause, which seems a very idle thing to do, but very few are willing to do it.

First of all, the shoes or boots must not be worn so tight as to prevent the circulation. No dictation of false pride should be allowed in this matter, for there is too much at stake.

Second, for winter there is no covering so good to be next the feet as woollen. It serves a double purpose, of being a good non-conductor of heat, and thus holds the heat of the body, and through a slight irritation of the surface keeps up a circulation in the capillaries next the skin, thus creating warmth. If the feet are once thoroughly chilled it is not the wisest plan to warm them by placing in water well heated, but far better to wash them thoroughly in water from which imply the chill has been taken, then with a crash towel rub the surface until it is red with blood, and the feet burning under the friction. This method is a good one to preserve the warmth of the feet if used before the exposure.

LAW VERSUS COOKED MEATS, AS FOOD FOR CATTLE.

Dr. E. Wolff, a German chemist, reports the following experiments in feeding roots to cattle. Two cows were experimented on, which together weighed 650 pounds. They received daily, during the whole time, 8½ pounds of hay, 1 pound of oat straw, 4½ pounds of cut straw, and the roots mentioned in the following table, which also gives the weight of butter and milk produced in the several cases:—

Milk to

His confederates, who had driven a sleigh within a short distance of the bank, drove away, and escaped.

"Where were you standing at the time this trouble occurred?" asked a lawyer in a police court this morning of an athletic female, whose avoirdupois ranged somewhere in the vicinity of two hundred pounds. "You can bet your life I was standing at my husband's back, where every woman ought to be when the old man is going to get into a row." No further questions were asked.

VETERAN MARKSMEN.—The Montreal Gazette says:—"It is pleasing to be able to inform the public, especially those of Glengarry, that at a shooting match held at North Lancaster on New Year's Day, where a multitude had assembled, Capt. Alex. McDonald, aged 82 years, and Hugh McDonald, aged 70 years, both veterans of 1812, were counted the best marksmen of the day.

A new style of winter vehicle called the Russian sleigh, is much favored in New York. It is as broad as ordinary cutters, and about four times as long, the general appearance of the box being that of a delicately formed snow-shoe. It is seemingly of very stout construction, and much safer than the ordinary sleigh, so long as no attempt is made to turn it around in deep snow.

Dr. Goldie, the medical officer of health for Leeds, states in his last report that every one of the 30 guests who attended the "Irish wake" of a girl who recently died from typhus fever in that town, have been prostrated by the same disease, and no fewer than nine of those cases had already had a fatal termination.

London is, at present, usually afflicted with small-pox. The three hospitals at Hampstead, Homerton, and Stockwell devoted to this disease, are full, and contain in the aggregate six hundred patients. The fever hospital at Hoxton, accommodating three hundred, has been devoted to the sick with small pox, and others in Fulham and Deptford are now being built for the purpose.

In England the railway enters every town or city by the high or low level. It crosses every country road by viaduct or tunnel. Access to the road-bed is entirely forbidden to the public. Waking on the track by other than road employees is a practice quite unknown and unheard of. Nothing more astonishing the European visitor than our reckless system of railway accommodations for running over men, women, and children in city and suburb.

The wife of Mr. H. C. Wilmot, of Victoria, was the victim of a shocking accident on Wednesday evening, Dec. 20. She was engaged in dressing for Foresters' ball, and had cleaned a pair of kid gloves with benzine. Placing the gloves on her hands, she approached the naked flame of the candle for the purpose of drying them, when they took fire. She screamed for help (being alone in the house), but none came. She tried to open the door and rush out, but in her agony could not turn the knob. At length a lady next door heard the screams, and ran in; but by this time the gloves were burned entirely off the hands, which had become masses of burnt and scorched flesh to her wrists. Fortunately, Mrs. Wilmot had on a woollen dress, to which the flames

They received daily, during the whole time, 8½ pounds of hay, 31 pounds of oat straw, 4½ pounds of lentil straw, and the roots mentioned in the following table, which also gives the weight of butter and milk produced in the several cases:—

Week of Experiment.	Food	Milk per Week	Butt'r	Butt'r
	Poun's	Poun's	Poun's	Poun's
First raw beet	82½	248½	8½	30
Second raw potatoes	82½	282½	6½	42
Third, cooked beet	123½	288½	8½	30
Fourth, cooked potatoes	82½	248½	9½	27

From the above it will be seen that the cooked potatoes greatly increased the butter without adding so much to the volume of milk as the raw one, which made the milk of a thin and watery appearance.—Agricultural Gazette.

The enormous cost of funerals is again attracting attention in New York. A leading undertaker of that city declares that the most economical funeral which one can possibly have with any regard for decency costs $200. The funeral of the two brothers buried in the Brooklyn theatre at which there were ten carriages and was considered cheap at that. In comparison with prices like these, cremation at $160 has its attraction.

pounds. "You can bet your life I was standing at my husband's back, where every woman ought to be when the old man is going to get into a row." No further questions were asked.

VETERAN MARKSMEN.—The Montreal Gazette says:—"It is pleasing to be able to inform the public, especially those of Glengarry, that at a shooting match held at North Lancaster on New Year's Day, where a multitude had assembled, Capt. Alex. McDonald, aged 82 years, and Hugh McDonald, aged 70 years, both veterans of 1812, were counted the best marksmen of the day.

A new style of winter vehicle called the Russian sleigh, is much favored in New York. It is as broad as ordinary cutters, and about four times as long, the general appearance of the box being that of a delicately formed snow-shoe. It is seemingly of very stout construction, and much safer than the ordinary sleigh, so long as no attempt is made to turn it around in deep snow.

Dr. Goldie, the medical officer of health for Leeds, states in his last report that every one of the 30 guests who attended the "Irish wake" of a girl who recently died from typhus fever in that town, have been prostrated by the same disease, and no fewer than nine of those cases had already had a fatal termination.

London is, at present, usually afflicted with small-pox. The three hospitals at Hampstead, Homerton, and Stockwell devoted to the disease, are full, and contain in the aggregate six hundred patients. The fever hospital at Hoxton, accommodating three hundred, has been devoted to the sick with small pox, and others in Fulham and Deptford are now being built for the purpose.

In England the railway enters every town or city by the high or low level. It crosses every country road by viaduct or tunnel. Access to the road-bed is entirely forbidden to the public. Waking on the track by other than road employees is a practice quite unknown and unheard of. Nothing more astonishes the European visitor than our reckless system of railway accommodations for running over men, women, and children in city and suburb.

The wife of Mr. H. C. Wilmot, of Victoria, was the victim of a shocking accident on Wednesday evening, Dec. 20. She was engaged in dressing for Foresters' ball, and had cleaned a pair of kid gloves with benzine. Placing the gloves on her hands, she approached the flared flame of the candle for the purpose of drying them, when they took fire. She screamed for help (being alone in the house), but none came. She tried to open the door and rush out, but in her agony could not turn the knob. At length a lady next door heard the screams, and ran in; but by this time the gloves were burned entirely off the hands, which had become masses of burnt and scorched flesh to her wrists. Fortunately, Mrs. Wilmot had on a woollen dress, to which the flames did not communicate, and her life is not in danger.

When Daniel Webster, the celebrated American senator, visited England after he had attained fame enough to precede him, an English gentleman took him one day to see Lord Brougham. The eminent Briton received Daniel with such coolness that he was glad to get away and back to his rooms. The friend who had taken him at once returned in haste and anger to Lord Brougham. "My lord, how could you have behaved with such unseemly rudeness and discourtesy to so great a lawyer and statesman? It was insulting to him, and has filled me with mortification." "Why, what on earth have I done, and whom have I been rude to?" "To Daniel Webster, of the Senate of the United States," Great Jupiter, what a blunder! I thought it was that fellow Webster who made a dictionary and nearly ruined the English language." And then the great Chancellor quickly hunted up the American senator, and, having other taste in common besides law and politics, they made a royal night of it.

The "Young Men's Shamrock Benevolent Society" of Kingston, intend giving a ball on the 7th February, for the benefit of the poor in that city. Something similar in Napanee would doubtless be a valuable aid to Our Readings, in their work of benevolence.

Muscular Exercise.

If a man has a broken back we will say nothing about it, but there is no excuse for an albedodied specimen of humanity, having a ten acre lot fenced in with a six foot snow drift, left to be melted by the spring sunshine. There is nothing like snow-shovelling to make a man feel his outs, and we know a few of our townsmen who look upon a snow bank in front of their homesteads with the greatest equanimity.

The Belleville Intelligencer, says:—The roads through that county are in many places completely blocked up, and abandoned; teams going through the fields for miles. The roads have not been worse since the winter of 1874-5.

Winter Enjoyment.
The London Advertiser says:—Mammoth sleighing parties are all the rage these winter evenings. They inevitably result in frost bites, palpitations of the heart, bad colds and engagements to marry.

A Live Turk.
The Whig says:—One of the greatest curiosities was the presence at the City Hotel of a Turkish gentleman dressed in native costume—a delegate, we believe, to the recent Centennial Exposition.

New Yacht.
The Cobourg Star says:—"Captain Alex. Cuthbert is making rapid progress with the yacht which he is constructing or Mr. Wallace. She is destined for pleasure sailing and comfort. Her hull measures 80 feet, 36 feet over all."

Fire.
The Reporter says that on the 2nd inst., a farm dwelling house, belonging to the estate of the late Samuel Youmans, in the Township of Portland, was burned. It was occupied by George Youmans, who last nearly all of his household effects. Cause unknown.

Sunday Fires.
Our last six fires have occurred on Sunday, many of them during divine worship. Last Sunday our churches were emptied in three minutes, every one rushed to the scene of the conflagration, making the quickest fire-muster on record.

New Book.
We have received the first and second number of the "Illustrated History of Canada." It is beautifully illustrated, and neatly got up. Canadians, everywhere, should subscribe for this great national work. Address, Hazen B. Digby & Co., 28 and 30, St. Francis Xavier Street, Montreal.

Lecture.
Father Brettarh, of Trenton, delivered his lecture on Friday evening last, in the Catholic church of this place, to a large and very attentive audience. The Rev. gentleman is possessed of great ability as a speaker and logical reasoner. The subject—"Is Catholic Saint Worship Idolatry," was handled in a masterly manner.

Weather.
That weather man Vennor, persists in foretelling all sorts of weather, whether we like the weather, or whether we don't, whether we want warm weather, or whether we want cold weather, whether we want wet weather, or whether we want dry weather, he prophesies the weather that is to be the weather, whether we will, or whether we won't.

Winchester Island.
The annual tea meeting in connection with the Presbyterian church, will be held in the Township Hall Stella, on Jan. 10th 1877. The public are cordially invited to attend, a good time is anticipated.

Extreme Cold.
On Friday and Saturday mornings, the 12th and 13th, we had a first-class Canadian cold snap. On Saturday at 8 a.m. twenty-one degrees below zero, with a northern exposure. At noon the mercury had risen 31 degrees.

Accident.
James Sherman, a clerk in the employ of Mr. Robert Graham, of Enterprise, was picking to pieces a cap attached to a can of dynamite, an explosion followed, removing two fingers and a piece of his thumb, and injuring his face and head. The unfortunate young man is in a fair way of recovery.

Charity Ball.
The "Young Men's Shamrock Benevolent Society" of Kingston, intend giving a ball on the 7th February, for the benefit of the poor in that city. Something similar in Napanee would doubtless be a valuable aid to Our Readings, in their work of benevolence.

Muscular Exercise.
If a man has a broken back we will say nothing about it, but there is no excuse for an able-bodied specimen of humanity, having a ten acre lot fenced in with a six foot snow drift, left to be melted by the spring sunshine. There is nothing like snow-shovelling to make a man feel his oats, and we know a few of our townsmen who look upon a snow bank in front of their homesteads with the greatest equanimity.

On the Ice.
The lady patrons of Jasper's icy carpet, will be pleased to learn that they have a fellow skater in Her Excellency the Countess of Dufferin. At the opening of the Toronto Curling and Skating Rink, she was presented on behalf of the lady members, with a pair of Barney & Berry, gold and silver-plated skates. The Countess having had the skates adjusted, led off on the "outside edge" skating around the rink in a most graceful manner, and cutting a "pigeon wing" in the most approved New York style.

Removed.
We have removed to our old store in the Perry Block, with a new stock of goods, (not smoked,) carefully selected from the best Manufacturers, which we think will suit all. We hope to see all our old customers, and many new ones. A few of the old goods still on hand, which we offer at half their value. Come and see us in the east end of the Perry Block.

ROSE & FRALICK.

To the County Council.
We beg to call the attention of this body of officials to the fact that, a very little effort on their part will enable the individual members of the council, as well the travelling public, to come in and go out of town without having to climb over drifts higher than the fences, or their horses heads,—drive through fields,—go slow, and feel like cursing the old authorities who had our narrow forty foot roads laid out. The remedy for this evil, is to have our leading roads widened, to say seventy-five or eighty feet. This will effectually prevent the forming of drifts in the centre of the road, or across from fence to fence, as is now so often the case. This is so simple a preventive, and will so complete, that we wonder our council in their wisdom, have never thought of it. It has been tried in other places with complete success. The County Council in Hastings are giving it their attention, where their roads are not so narrow as ours. Legislation in this direction would confer a greater benefit to the County generally, than any other speciality our council can engage in.

COURT ITEMS.

ILLEGAL LIQUOR SELLING.

Upon the information and complaint of W. A. Hogle, License Inspector, John Lucas, and his son, Daniel Lucas, both of North Fredericksburgh, were summoned before Mr. James, and Mr. Webster, on Saturday, to answer to a charge of selling liquor without a license, on Jan 1st. Mr. Henderson, appeared for the defendants. Three witnesses examined and proved the charge so far as it related to Daniel Lucas, who was fined $30 and costs $8.35, or 30 days in gaol. He gave security for the payment on the levy. The case of John Lucas was dismissed.

APPEAL.

Mr. Henderson, of Henderson and Conates, has filed an appeal to the County Judge, from the decision of the Magistrates, in the case of Hogle vs. Hickey.

ILLEGAL LIQUOR SELLING.

Late on Thursday night of last week, in obedience to a warrant, William Hickey, of Hay Bay, appeared before Mr. James, to answer a charge of selling liquor without a license, preferred by the Inspector. The offence was clearly proven, the beverage illegally supplied being the seductive "Ginger Wine," which is erroneously considered a "temperance drink." Fined $20 and costs $8.70.—Standard.

THE GAS COMPANY.

SHAREHOLDERS' MEETING.

A general meeting of the shareholders of the Napanee Gas Company was held in the Council Room, on Thursday, 11th Jan., 1877. The following were present: Messrs. A. McNeill, (President), Neville, Furgeson, Douglass, McLoid, Clement, Smith, Miller, Preston, Carscadden, Her-ring, Bartlett, jr., Geddes and Conates. The president called the meeting to order, the Secretary read the report of

Catherine Cullen, a female lunatic in gaol here has not eaten any food for 24 days.

LONG FASTING.—A woman named Catharine Cullen, a resident of the municipality of Dungannon and Faraday, in the northern part of this County, was on the 15th December last committed to the County gaol here, as a lunatic, and since that time has not ate a particle of solid food. She will drink tea and water, but resists all entreaties to eat any food. She will not sleep in bed, but takes her rest upon the floor. The Whig says the new apparatus for making gas from petroleum, is working well. The work of 24 hours by the old process, can now be accomplished in half a day, or less.

BLOCKED.—The Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railway, south of the Cape, is so blocked up with snow that no mails are expected through for three days. This is not the shortest route to New York after several successive snow storms.—Whig.

SKATING.—Private speculation has given Kingston the benefit of rinks three in number. They may be termed the eastern, western and central, located opposite the Tete de Pont Barracks, the City Buildings, and Gunningham's respectively. They are enclosed, and carefully attended, but we doubt if their proprietors will be remunerated for their labor and expense.—Whig.

The annual tea meeting in connection with the Presbyterian church, will be held in the Township Hall Stella, on Jan. 30th 1877. The public are cordially invited to attend, a good time is anticipated. Speakers from a distance are expected, besides the ministers of Amherst Island. Good music by the choir, both instrumental and vocal. Doors opened at 6 o'clock p. m. Refreshments served at 6:30, chairs to be taken at 7 o'clock. Tickets can be had from the committee. Ladies and children 25 cts. Gents 50 cts. See bills.

Badly Damaged.

A fellow citizen walking up Centre street had his new silk tile completely knocked over his eyebrows, and the crown stove in by a huge falling icicle. Not being able to extricate himself he felt his way to the paternal doorstep, where his frightened kelpmate had to remove his head covering with a pair of scissors. As a somewhat similar accident happened last year, the authorities should enforce the removal of these man-traps.

Counterfeiters.

A contemporary says:—Simultaneously with the appearance of new silver fifty-cent pieces, counterfeiters have gone to work and made imitations, and we would advise those who are in the habit of handling American silver to be on the lookout for them. The new counterfeit is the work of an artist. It is made of a combination of metals very nearly of the same specific gravity as silver, finished perfectly, and triple silver-plated, so that by the eye and the hand, it is beyond detection. It even has a good ring, only a little duller than that of the genuine coin, and is possible of detection by practiced ears. The fact of its light weight can also be detected by the scales. For general distribution it is a dangerous work of art.

Strikes.

The following is Chief Justice Harrison's opinion regarding strikes; he says:—"In this country we are all proud of our personal liberty, and this does not mean merely the liberty of moving about, but the liberty of thought and opinion. No man in this country is a slave, but every man is bound to fulfill the contract he has entered into. No man need work at a lower rate than that for which he has bargained, but no man should interfere with another who chooses to do so. A man has a perfect right to strike if he chooses, but he has no right under a trade union's organization to use violence and prevent others, either by threats or force. The law passed in reference to this kind of intimidation makes a man liable to a fine of one hundred dollars or three months' imprisonment. During the late strike the local police at the different towns where the strikers had assembled were found insufficient to quell the rioters, and after the three days recourse was had to the Government, who were bound to preserve order." He also forcibly condemned the habit of carrying fire arms and other dangerous weapons in this peaceful and law abiding country, as having a tendency to create much reckless disorder and riot in the community. He recommended the formation of a Provincial Police force, like the Irish Constabulary, that might be used for the suppression of riots, &c.

Letter from a Belleville Man.

Mr. Brooks writes:—"You know what moving is, but you cannot know except from personal experience how very unfinished is a Turkish house built to last. Everywhere something needs completing. Do our best, we shall live in what is but a summer house. Winter's storms teach our thin shell through and through. I was, however, rebuffed for a complaining spirit while visiting some poor families yesterday. I found one good woman without any fire at all, stitching a fine shirt to earn bread for an invailed husband, herself and children.

"Times are very, very hard here. The poor are uncommonly numerous, and their sufferings thrust themselves on one's notice on every hand. The Turk is said by those who have seen him put to the test in famine times, to possess no love in his nature. I can well believe it. He is very stately, and certainly imposing in appearance, but infinitely proud and selfish.

"The people in this country are such terrible sticklers for property. They think everything of position. They won't carry anything in their hands in the street, except the most dainty of fancy bags. A servant must follow behind with satchel, baby, or that not. They are so afraid of what Mrs. Grundy may say. Yet there is another side of this. There are so many poor boys and young men waiting at every boat landing or car station to carry one's parcels for two or three pence at most, one owes them a helping hand even though he may seem to be putting on airs. On one hand is a Scylla, and a Charybdis on the other."

THE "CODE OF HONOR."

The Bennet-May fracas being the latest sensation on the carpet, we subjoin the following for the benefit of our high-toned young men, who may wish to avenge their wounded dignity in a manner becoming gentlemen? In the famous "Code of Honor," prepared by John Lyde Wilson, of South Carolina, and which has governed such affairs since its publication, there are some paragraphs which may be considered of interest at this juncture. Section 3 of chapter 8 says:—

When the blows are given in the first instance and not returned, and the person first striking be badly beaten or otherwise, the party first struck is to make the demand, for blows do not satisfy a man.

In the "Irish Code of Honor," as prepared by Sir Jonas Barrington, and added as an appendix to this volume, rule 5 is as follows:—

As a blow is strictly prohibited under any circumstances among gentlemen, no verbal apology can be received for such an insult. The alternative, therefore, are:—The offender handing a cane to the injured party to be used on his own, (the offender's) back at the same time begging pardon; or exchanging three shots, and then asking pardon without the proffer of the cane.

 Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of
 it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine which have withstood the impartial
 judgment of the people for any great
 length of time. One of these is Thomas's ECLECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of
 six of the best Oils known, each one
 possessing virtues of its own. Scientific
 physicians know that medicines may be
 formed of several ingredients in certain
 fixed proportions of greater power and
 producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or
 in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change
 takes place forming a compound which
 could not by any possibility be made
 from any combination or proportions of
 the same ingredients and entirely different from anything ever before made,
 one which produces the most astonishing
 results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before
 discovered. It contains no alcohol or
 other volatile liquids consequently loses
 nothing by evaporation. Where applied
 you get the benefit of every drop; whereas
 with other preparation nearly all the
 alcohol is lost in that way, and you get
 only the small quantity of Oils which
 they may contain.

A severe and exhaustive process of reasoning shows, says the New York Times, that there is no place in a modern church where a hat can be reasonably safe. But let us be thankful that we are at the dawn of better things. A clever inventor has just devised a plan for solving the problem that has so long baffled the acutest minds. He has secured a patent for what he calls "an improved pew hat-holder." It consists of a sort of wire cage attached to the back of the pew, and intended as a receptacle for hats. When filled this receptacle revolves, and carries its precious freight into a safe and obscure recess, whence it is alleged that it can be withdrawn in an uninjured condition at the end of the service. Let us hope that the inventor is not too sanguine, and that his scheme will meet all the exigencies of the case. Who can tell how great will be the effect upon the spiritual welfare of the community when the masculine churchgoer can dismiss his hat from his mind and give his undivided attention to other, purer and better themes.

AN ANTIDOTE FOR TRAMPS.—The Council of Stratford have evidently discovered the correct way in which to get rid of the presence of tramps. The moment one of these peripatetic individuals asks for assistance, he is taken to the rear of the Market building, where he is confronted by a large heap of field stones. A three foot bickory stick with a hammer at the end is then offered to him, and he is politely informed that the town will allow him 50 cents a day in provisions or cash, provided he gives satisfaction as a stone breaker. A peculiar expression comes over Mr. Tramp's face at this information—he gives the piece of clothes line which fastens his ragged unmentionables an extra hitch—raises up his quib of tobacco—swears like a trooper—and leaves Stratford behind him as fast as his dilapidated legs can follow him. THOMAS'S ECLECTRIC OIL
Gold. Do you know anything of
it? If not, it is time you did.

There are but few preparations of medicine
 which have withstood the impartial
 judgment of the people for any great
 length of time. One of these is Thomas's ECLECTRIC OIL purely a preparation of
 six of the best Oils known, each one
 possessing virtues of its own. Scientific
 physicians know that medicines may be
 formed of several ingredients in certain
 fixed proportions of greater power and
 producing effects which could never result from the use of any one of them, or
 in different combinations. Thus in the preparation of this Oil a chemical change
 takes place forming a compound, which
 could not by any possibility be made
 from any combination or proportions of
 the same ingredients and entirely af-
 ferent from anything ever before made,
 one which produces the most astonishing
 results and having a wider range of application than any medicine ever before
 discovered. It contains no alcohol or
 other volatile liquids consequently loses
 nothing by evaporation. Where applied
 you get the benefit of every drop; whereas
 with other preparation nearly all the
 alcohol is lost in that way, and you get
 only the small quantity of Oils which
 they may contain.

Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,
and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. AM AND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may
know something of the merits of your CONSTI-TUTIONAL REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am twenty-
nine years old; had been out of health for about
five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines,
without receiving any permanent benefit, but
continued rather to grow worse, until last fall,
when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe sore-
ness and pain under the shoulder blades and
through the shoulders, with very lame back,
and a feeling in my right lung as though there
was a weight bearing it down, with continual
dropping in the throat and down upon the
lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an
improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health so as to be able to toil hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use
of your Catarrh Remedy.

Yours truly HENRY NIDER.

I, the undersigned, have been suffering very much for the last two years from Rheumatism in the ankle joint, so much that I was often prevented from attending to my calling, but three applications of Dr. Burnbaum's Rheumatism and Gout Remedy, gave me that relief from pain and stiffness which I had not experienced for the last two years, and after eight days' use of that remedy, I find myself entirely cured.

When you see a drunkard sot
From out the tavern reel,
Be thankful of your better lot,
And turn not on your heel;
Go, warn him of the dreadful glass,
And save him if you can;
But never scorn him as you pass—
Remember—he's a man.

When you see a colored skin,
Oh! speak in kindly tone;
Perchance a heart may beat therein
More tender than your own;
